Summary of D. C. Budget for 1937—Page 13.

By James D. Secrest.

The National Capital was dealt the most severe blow in its prolonged battle with Congress over Federal-District fiscal relations yesterday when the sub-committee on District appropriations reported to the House a bill with the United States lump-sum payment cut from $5,700,000 to $2,700,000.

Ignoring an unrepealed 16-year-old law that the Federal Government shall share 40 per cent of the cost of maintaining the National Capital, the sub-committee headed by Representative Thomas L. Blanton proposed a reduction to approximately 6 per cent without repealing the 60-40 statute.

The slash in the Federal contribution was but one of the broad alterations made in the 1937 District budget as recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Total appropriations carried in the bill amount to $42,573,283 and exceed the Budget Bureau's estimates by $908,283. The increase, however, is misleading in that almost every department suffered reductions at the hands of the sub-committee.

Three New Items.

Accounting for the total increase were three new items recommended to the House. They are $250,000 to begin construction of a new span to replace Chain Bridge, $353,000 for an addition to Eastern High School and $1,600,000 to start construction of a new courts building in Judiciary Square.

The public schools and the health and welfare departments suffered the greatest setbacks, except for the lump-sum payment reduction. This had been predicted because of Representative Blanton's dissatisfaction with the enforcement of his anti-Red rider and on account of his feud with the District Medical Society.

All funds for character education were stricken from the bill, reputedly because of the charges of pro-communism against W. W. Charters, director of the work, and the sub-committee recommended that the Board of Education "eliminate from the public schools all communistic books and magazines."

Health Department appropriations were cut $23,800 below Budget Bureau estimates in the face of protestations that the Budget Bureau's recommendations were extremely inadequate. Funds were denied for the continuation of the adult Tuberculosis Hospital at Fourteenth and Upshur streets after January 1, 1937, and other reductions were made throughout the hospital services.

Ends Part-Time Aid.

The sub-committee's master stroke in its battle with Washington physicians came, however, in a rider which would have the effect of depriving the District of the services of doctors who serve the city on a part-time basis. The bar, if it becomes a law, will also prevent members of the corporation counsel's office from teaching in law schools.

The proviso states no part of the appropriations "shall be available for the payment of the salary of any officer or employe of the District of Columbia whose salary as such officer is $2,400 or more per annum who is engaged in any outside business or profession in addition to his official duties."

Blanton, in opening two days of general debate on the bill, told the House that the recommendations were unanimously indorsed by both the District sub-committee and the full House Appropriations Committee.

Ditter Sides With Blanton.

Until this year District residents were under the impression that Representative Ditter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, was sympathetic to their pleas, but the transcript of hearings released with the bill dispelled such illusions, as it showed Ditter as second to Blanton in persistent insistence that Washingtonians are under-taxed.

The District unemployment relief administration fared almost as badly as the Health Department and schools. Salaries of the administrator, from Miss M. Alice Hill down through the ranks, were slashed almost in half. A total of $150,180 was deleted from the salary scales alone. Miss Hill's pay was cut from

3,000-Lb. Statue Slips, Kills Studio Workman

Chicago, March 3 (AP).—Kenneth Witter, 25-year-old workman, was crushed to death today by a 3,000-pound stone statue.

With eight other laborers, he was attempting to lift it from a pedestal preparatory to shipment to Boulder Dam in Colorado. The huge figure slipped from the block and tackle and pinned him against the wall.

The accident occurred in the studio of Osker J. W. Hansen, who has a contract with the Government for several statues.

Conferees Agree on Leave Bills; Clear Way for Enactment Soon

26-Day Vacation, 90-Day Sickness Allowance Are Approved.

Senate and House conferees reached a compromise agreement yesterday afternoon on the Government leave bills and paved the way for the early enactment into law of measures restoring vacations and sick leave privileges to a pre-depression status.

With all conferees present and agreeing to the changes, the following compromises were agreed upon:

The effective date was fixed on January 1, 1936, instead of July 1, either 1935 or 1936, as provided in the House and Senate measures, respectively.

Ninety days will be allowed as accumulative sick leave, instead of 60 days as in the Senate bill, or 120 days as voted by the House. Accumulation of vacation leave was left at 60 days, although the House had allowed 120 days.

A new section dealing with over time work was substituted for both the Senate and House provisions. The compromise plan provides that, beginning July 1, 1936, departments shall keep accurate records of all over time work done by Government employes. These figures must be reported first to the Civil Service Commission and then through it to Congress.

REP. ROBERT RAMSPECK.

Chairman Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee, explained that this provision will give Con-

7-Hour Parley Fails to Break Elevator Strike

By the United Press.

New York, March 3.—Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia's second attempt to end the elevator strike collapsed tonight when a seven-hour conference of strikers and representatives of the realty advisory board ended without action.

"No progress was made," was the curt comment of James J. Bambrick, president of the Building Service Employes' Union, as he strode out of City Hall.

Intervention of the Federal Government was promised as Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady raced toward New York.

Failure of the conference left thousands of New Yorkers facing another night in unheated apartments to which they had to climb many weary flights of stairs.

McGrady Chief Hope.

William Rawlins, executive secretary of the realty advisory board—the organization responsible for maintaining service in apartments, hotels and office buildings—also was glum at the end of the mayor's conference.

"It looks like a deadlock," he said.

McGrady, known as one of the ablest strike mediators in the country, seemed to be the chief hope. He broke off negotiations at Akron, Ohio, where labor trouble threatens the rubber industry, to start for New York. The state of emergency proclaimed yesterday by LaGuardia, who fears for the health and safety of 7,000,000 New Yorkers remained in effect. Police, firemen and health officers provided emergency service and fired furnaces in homes where there was sickness.

Bambrick and Rawlins agreed to return to city hall at 1 p. m. tomorrow—when McGrady presumably will be here—to try for the third time to reach an agreement.

The strike spread slowly today and both sides had their moments of triumph.

35 Americans Feared in Path Of China Reds

Communists Invade Shansi Province; Missionaries in Danger Zone.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, March 3.—A Chinese Communist army swept into Shansi Province tonight and grave fears were aroused for more than a score of American missionaries believed to be in the path of the invasion.

New Sino-Japanese complications also were threatened by the red attack from the southwest into the east-central province.

An army was hurriedly mobilized at Taiyuan, capital of the province, by the aged war lord, Marshal Yen Hsi-Shan, and a virtual state of martial law reigned.

Two battalions of Shansi province troops already have been ambushed and wiped out by the reds, said Taiyuan. The general of the defending troops killed himself to avoid capture.

No word has been received from 21 American and Canadian missionaries stationed at Fenchow, 60 miles southwest of Taiyuan, since last Saturday. This section is near the district through which the reds are believed sweeping.

The foreigners are on the staff of the American board mission at Fenchow. Consular authorities of the United States warned them Saturday to be ready to evacuate, but almost immediately communication lines broke down and their fate remained a matter of conjecture tonight.

Officials said they hoped that the

Italo-German Accord On Austria Reported

Paris, March 3 (AP).—The Geneva correspondent of the newspaper L'Oeuvre reported today that Germany and Italy have reached an agreement, in principle at least, regarding Austria.

He stated that he believed the agreement followed the general lines of the Polish-German treaty, involving mutual undertakings to respect the present status for a given number of years.

Britain Maps Huge Empire Defense Plan

Billion and Half May Be Spent; Air Expansion Is Main Factor.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 3.—Stressing the existing dangers to peace, Great Britain joined the world armament race today by announcing a defense expansion program so vast and flexible that no attempt was made even to calculate its cost to the Nation.

The program centered about expansion of the air force as "the most urgent and most important of our defense requirements in the present situation."

But far-reaching increases for the army and navy, together with plans for mobilizing industry for production of munitions also were disclosed.

A white paper, or Government report, issued after months of preparation by cabinet committees, was interpreted in diplomatic quarters as furnishing a warning to Italy, Japan, and Germany that Great Britain is prepared to defend her empire and will not allow others to forge ahead of her in armed strength.

Outlay to Be Heavy.

The Government warned the programs of "far reaching character are likely to involve a heavy financial outlay." Regular estimates for the three fighting services for the financial year beginning April 1 are to be issued tomorrow, Thursday, and Friday and are expected to show an increase of £31,000,000 (about $155,000,000) without making any provision for the new program announced.

It has been unofficially estimated that around £300,000,000 (about $1,500,000,000) would be the cost of the new scheme over a three-year period.

Supplementary estimates will be announced later to finance the part of the rearming program to be carried out within the next fiscal year.

Much of the increase in regular estimates was due to the royal air force expansion program, on which the government embarked last year and which already is seriously taxing the capacity of every military aircraft factory in Britain.

2 Battleships Included.

Despite this, big increases in fighting strength, together with reserve planes and pilots, were announced, along with the disclosure that Britain plans shortly to build two battleships, an aircraft carrier, five cruisers and to replace steadily overage destroyers and submarines. Britain built her last battleship in 1925.

Experts estimated that the heavier vessels projected for 1936 and 1937 will cost at least £40,000,000. Navy personnel will be increased by 6,000 men, while four army infantry battalions will be raised.

The most important army planes, however, involve modernization and mechanization of coast guard and antiaircraft defenses and the reconditioning of territorials, or national guards, to man these defenses at home in support of the regular army abroad when necessary.

Industry is to be organized so that it can rapidly be changed from commercial to war production in case of necessity. Government armament factories will be extended or duplicated.

Cause Sensation.

Members of Parliament and representatives of every embassy and legation in London were astir early to get the white paper and spent the day studying the text.

Foreign attaches were particularly impressed by repeated emphasis that the plans are flexible subject to change, depending upon international developments.

These observers believed this constituted a warning Britain will throw her entire resources behind a program to make the Empire secure from any threat.

"It is essential that the relation to our own armed forces to those of other great powers should be maintained at a figure which will be high enough to enable us to exercise

Roosevelt Asks Graduated Tax On Corporate Surplus as Part Of 1.137 Billion Revenue Plan

Securities Market Stunned by Plan

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—A complete change in the present method of handling corporation finances, reaching into the next generation, was Wall Street's interpretation today of the Roosevelt taxation proposals.

With only a brief forewarning, securities markets were stunned into inactivity when the President asked Congress for around $1,600,000,000 to be raised by a levy on undistributed corporation profits, while repealing the present $1,000,000,000 taxes obtained from corporation income and other corporate levies.

That same first reaction was general in banking houses, corporations and among economists and fiscal authorities.

From the standpoint of the securities traders, the tax was greeted as a windfall, since corporations would be forced either to increase payments to stockholders or to pay the heavy tax. Stocks promptly gained $1 to $5 a share on the New York Stock Exchange.

There remained, however, the disquieting prediction in several quarters that should corporations deplete reserves by dividend payments, they would be in a weakened condition in an emergency requiring cash.

Offset Is Seen.

Balancing that, some said, was the possibility that companies needing cash could immediately offer additional stock either to their own stockholders or to the general public.

But Wall Street analysts raised the objection that when a company needs cash, the condition of the market or the company might be such that a stock offering would be received poorly or rejected.

Some believed the proposed new laws would provide for maintenance of a "reasonable" surplus untaxed, but accountants declared there was no method for determining the size of a "reasonable" surplus for all corporations as a group.

One banker asserted corporate managers could better decree the size of the surplus than Congress, a stand which repudiated the entire taxation method.

From the broader point of view, economists stated the velocity of money would be increased by forced payments either to stockholders or the Government, and most of them decided the increase as such at this time would be beneficial.

Creation of a new cycle in the velocity of money, however, was envisaged. When earnings are high, dividends and taxes would be high; when earnings are low, dividends and taxes would be low, it was stated.

Effect Is Problematical.

What effect the accentuation of peaks and valleys in the national total of dividends will have on the future economy was not even guessed at by most authorities. Those who did hazard a conclusion were sharply divided.

Sociologists in sympathy with wealth distribution theories liked the idea that corporations owned mostly by wealthy stockholders would have to bear a larger tax than companies owned by numerous small stockholders, since levies on the large incomes swelled by dividends would be much greater than at the other end of the scale.

Many accountants asserted the new system would be more simple than the present rather complicated arrangements for tax collections from corporations, which would be repealed.

Rumor He Is Dead Angers Sen. Borah

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, last night stated his readiness to "spit in the face of the man," who started rumors that he was dead. The story had been floating persistently about the Capital all day.

When reached by telephone, the Republican White House aspirant appeared not only very well, but quite angry. He had difficulty in choosing adequate words to express his feelings.

Asked to divulge the identity of the gossip, all he would say was:

"It ought to be apparent to anyone with a grain of sense."

London, March 3 (AP).—Countess Barbara Hutton Haugwitz-Reventlow, seriously ill over the week-end following the birth of a son, was stated at her home today to be "progressing satisfactorily."

Brown to Press New Campaign On Traffic Toll

By Howard F. Wentworth.

A new series of verbal bombshells crackled over Capitol Hill yesterday, and Washington's tangled traffic problem was ground under the fire of stinging criticism as surprise plans for drastic action were revealed.

At hearings before the special House sub-committee investigating local traffic conditions, the following points developed:

1. Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, announced a new "crack down" safety drive, designed to bring a conference of public utility officials and District transportation heads, with a view toward "driving death from the streets."

2. A fiery rebuke from Representative Wood (Democrat), Missouri, denouncing members of Congress who flout defiance at local regulations by saying "You can't arrest me!"

Street Cars, Buses.

3. A bitter attack on the operation of street cars and buses, in which Representatives Schulte (Democrat), Indiana, and Carpenter (Democrat), Kansas, frowned on lawbreaking motormen and bus drivers.

4. Open disapproval of Washington's present "complicated, slow and uncertain" Police Court procedure by Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman, including suggestions for a revised system of magistrate courts.

5. A scathing denunciation by Representative Wood, striking at current parking problems.

Maj. Brown's surprise announcement of a scheduled "crack down" safety drive came when Schulte interrupted the hearing to recall him to the witness stand.

Death from Streets.

"What's this I hear about you raising hell, and turning things upside down in efforts to drive death from Washington streets?" Schulte asked.

"That states it pretty well," Brown replied. "I don't know how it got out, but I have planned to confer with public utility and transportation heads in an effort to promote safety among drivers of public vehicles."

Schulte explained the story came to him from a taxi driver. The taximan, Schulte said, expressed fear of violating the law "because Maj. Brown is raising hell, and is going to drive death from the streets."

"I am calling in superintendents of transportation for large trucking concerns and officials of bus, street car and taxi companies for a conference," Maj. Brown continued. "We are going to have better law observance by drivers of these ve-

Sibley Assails Bills to Expand Trade Controls

By Felix Bruner.

Attacks against two pending bills, seeking to broaden the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, were made yesterday by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and by the Association of Food and Grocery Chain Stores.

Harper Sibley, chamber president, appeared before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, in opposition to the Wheeler-Rayburn bill to expand the commission's investigating authority. The bill would make unlawful "deceptive acts and practices in commerce," in addition to unfair methods of competition.

The chain store organization struck at the Robinson-Patman bill, an extension of the Clayton anti-trust act, which would prohibit special allowances for large purchasers. In the Senate, Senator Logan (Democrat), Kentucky, urged passage of the bill, and said its major purpose was to eliminate discrimination against small purchasers. The law would be administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

A Judicial Agency.

Sibley told the Senate committee that the Federal Trade Commission never was intended as a police court, and that business generally had co-operated with the commission, under its powers relating to methods of unfair competition.

"Judicial functions and inquisitorial functions are obviously inconsistent," Sibley said. "Their existence in the commission has undoubtedly lessened the usefulness and success of the commission as a judicial agency, in proportion to the degree in which its energies have been devoted to its other role."

Sibley referred to the bill as a "most extraordinary delegation of power," covering investigation of all manner of business practices and corporation organization.

"The auxiliary power of each House of Congress, to provide information necessary for shaping or enacting legislation, is not limited to matters over which Congress may legislate directly. It also extends to other matters which may reasonably be expected to furnish information useful to Congress, in drafting legislation on matters within its lawful powers. It includes not merely the power to subpena testimony, but the power to arrest and imprison recalcitrant witnesses, or to punish them for contempt; all without the interposition of court proceedings of any kind.

"It is now proposed to grant similar powers to the commission,

Mystery Derelict in Arctic Ice May Be Ship Lost 50 Years Ago

By the Associated Press.

Barrow, Alaska, March 3.—Identity of a derelict ship locked in the Arctic ice far off Point Barrow puzzled both natives and whites today—but some believed she might be one of seven stanch whalers which sailed into the northern seas 50 years ago and never returned.

The vessel, a two-masted schooner, first was sighted a week ago. Eskimos attempted to reach it but failed. Among them was Claire Oakpeha, who ran 15 miles across the Arctic tundra to Barrow last summer with the news of the Will Rogers-Wiley Post plane tragedy.

Observers at first believed it was the ill-fated fur trading ship Baychimo, abandoned four years ago after being trapped in the ice. Oakpeha and Bill Solemon, another native, however, insisted it was not.

Charles D. Brower, veteran whaler, said there was only a bare possibility it might be one of the old-time oak built ships, famous for their ability to resist the ice pack.

"It's 50 years since the seven great whaling ships floated out into the unknown and became fast in the ice, with 100 or more men aboard," said Brower.

"It is hardly possible that one of those ships could have survived until now, but strange things have happened in the ice pack."

The mystery of the derelict may be solved when the ice pack clears this summer.

League Sends Peace Appeal to Italy, Sets Limit Of Week for Reply, Clears Way for Ban on Oil

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, March 3.—The League of Nations appealed to Italy and Ethiopia today to make peace, but optimism was noticeably absent among officials. One week was given for a reply.

Some members of the "Committee of Thirteen," including all members of the council save the belligerents themselves, found hope in the fact that Premier Mussolini has not yet officially and finally rejected the peace project.

(Rome dispatches said the peace plea was received coldly there, but that Fascist officials were giving it a close study.)

In British circles pessimism was pronounced. It was repeatedly emphasized that the peace move was a French idea and that sanctions would continue as usual until and if peace is actually concluded.

Moreover, the Sanctions Committee of Eighteen will meet tomorrow to instruct its technical committee to proceed to draw up a detailed plan for enforcement of an oil embargo, so as to have it ready if the peace move fails.

In other words, the deck is to remain cleared for action and guns loaded. Italians here were noncommittal.

Italy and Ethiopia were given one week to reply to the peace appeal and the committee will meet again on March 10, day of the deadline.

Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary who announced yesterday his government is prepared to go ahead with an oil embargo, prepared to leave for London tonight or tomorrow. Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin of France, also is departing.

There were rumors of possible Franco-British talks within the next few days on the general European situation, particularly in view of Adolf Hitler's recent reported gesture to France. These rumors could not be confirmed, but neither were they flatly denied.

If Italy and Ethiopia refuse the overture for peace, the Sanctions Committee of Eighteen will meet March 11 to vote on an oil embargo and possibly other sanctions, such as closing ports of League members to Italian ships.

League officials said the resolution asking peace suggested that there be negotiations for an armistice as a preliminary to a peace conference to be held here.

The text of the appeal follows:

"The committee of 13, acting under the mandate which the council entrusted to it by its resolution of December 19, addresses a pressing appeal to the two belligerents toward the immediate opening of negotiations within the framework of the League of Nations and the spirit of the covenant with a view to the prompt cessation of hostilities and the definite re-establishment of peace.

"The committee of 13 will meet March 10 to take note of the replies of the two governments."

An informed source said the plea was "toned down" considerably from its original wording to avoid possible injury to the pride or feelings of either belligerent.

Originally, the time limit for replies was two days, but this was extended to a week.

620 Million Yearly Set as Added Yield

House Committee Will Begin 'Exploratory' Study Today.

Text of the President's Tax Message—Page 7.

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt yesterday called on a reluctant Congress to find $1,137,000,000 in new revenues to pay for farm and bonus inroads on the Federal Treasury, and "suggested" a steeply graduated levy on undivided corporate earnings, which immediately evoked a storm of "soak the thrifty" protests from Capitol Hill.

Convening immediately, the House Ways and Means Committee directed an "exploratory" study by its tax subcommittee, headed by Representative Samuel B. Hill, of Washington. The Hill subcommittee will meet today and within the next ten days is expected to report out a tentative plan for raising $786,000,000 annually for three years, and $620,000,000 a year thereafter for nine years, to meet the total declared needed by the President.

Republicans Assail Plan.

Republicans on both sides of the Capitol lost no time in assailing the proposed corporate surplus tax as removing a safeguard that enabled many well-managed corporations to survive the depression. A pitched battle broke out in the House, presaging a tattoo of opposition that will echo throughout committee hearings on the plan.

President Roosevelt attempted to meet the opposition at an afternoon press conference, at which he distinguished between corporate reserves and undistributed corporate earnings and pointed out that the former will not be taxed. He took the view that his plan would increase the velocity of money and influence an expansion of business.

Receipt of the message, with its controversial tax proposal, coupled with prospects of a long fight over projected relief appropriations, slowed down moves for an early adjournment and revived predictions that Congress will be in session until political convention time.

Two Programs.

The President's "suggestions" for raising the money were divided into "temporary" and "permanent" programs, and proposed levies be imposed in the following manner:

1. A graduated tax on corporate income, including dividends from other corporations, which is not distributed as earned. This would be accompanied by repeal of the present corporate income tax, the capital stock tax, and the related excess profits tax. Although the President mentioned no rates, a scale ranging between 20 and 40 per cent and averaging around 33⅓ per cent was discussed. Mr. Roosevelt estimated this would yield $620,000,000 a year additional.

2. Removal of the present exemption of dividends from the normal tax on individual incomes. Thus the Government would reach corporate earnings either if they were held by the corporations, or if they were forced by the heavy tax into the pockets of stockholders.

3. A so-called "windfall" tax, aimed particularly at processors who benefited by the Supreme Court's rice millers' decision, which forced some $180,000,000 of impounded processing taxes back into the hands of processors. It also would hit processors who did not pay the AAA levy. This would fall under the President's "temporary" tax plan.

Revisions Weighed.

4. Revival of the processing tax in somewhat altered form, to be levied as a straight excise on the processing of certain agricultural commodities. The President proposed to increase the number of commodities reached, to lower greatly the rates of the old processing tax and to spread this tax over only two or three years.

These were the only taxes specifically mentioned. It is known, however, that the President has discussed with Democratic leaders certain other revisions that may be attempted, including the complete elimination of personal exemptions on surtax incomes and the lowering of exemptions on taxable estates.

After announcing his plan for "ex-

Wire Evidence Given to Lobby Group by FCC

Commission Is Revealed as Acting as Agent for Black Committee.

The Federal Communications Commission has been used by the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee to obtain copies of thousands of telegrams of corporations, law firms and individuals, it was revealed last night. In addition, the committee has seized by subpena vast numbers of messages relating to the fight on the utility holding company act and other legislation.

The commission has access to the books and records of telegraphic companies under the law. It was learned yesterday that during the recess of Congress clerks from the commission entered the offices of the Western Union here and copied some 13,000 wire messages, including a complete file of those sent by and to the American Liberty League's offices here.

No subpenas were issued by Senator Hugo Black's Investigating Committee for these messages, it was said.

Last month the committee, however, issued blanket subpenas to Western Union and Postal telegraph companies for all messages intended to affect legislation.

Assails Racketeering.

By the Associated Press.

Testimony that financial "racketeering" and declining prices have sharply reduced the actual value of many public utility stocks was received yesterday by the Senate Lobby Committee.

Victor A. Dorsey, of Chicago, 30 years in the business of appraising utility properties for rate-making purposes, testified that such enterprises had been capitalized at "hundreds of millions" more than was put into them, with consequently excessive rate charges.

It was his judgment after appraising properties in every State in the Union, he said, that the bonded indebtedness of the utilities industry just about covered the value of its actual physical assets.

"So there really is no value behind their preferred and common stocks?" inquired Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington.

"That is true."

No Value in Investments.

"And when the utilities companies were sending in thousands of telegrams arguing that the Wheeler-Rayburn bill would destroy the investments of stockholders there was really no actual value in those investments," Schwellenbach continued.

"That's true," Dorsey replied. "So far as the Wheeler-Rayburn bill was concerned, the investor had lost already."

"But not through the Wheeler-Rayburn bill," Chairman Black (Democrat), Alabama, cut in.

"No; he lost through the stock market and declining price levels."

Referring to huge write-ups of book value on which rates are fixed, Senator Gibson (Republican), Vermont, asked if such practices did not constitute "a form of racket that has developed."

"You could call it that."

"It's a pretty big racket, isn't it."

"Yes," said Dorsey, with a grin, "I think it's quite large."

The committee entered this phase of the investigation with an eye to a temporary injunction granted on Monday by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, restraining the Western Union from supplying it with telegrams sent through the law firm of Silas Strawn, former president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Outside Court Jurisdiction.

"I can't believe any judge in the United States would make that injunction permanent," Black told reporters. "The issue is completely and wholly outside the court jurisdiction. Repeatedly it has been held the Senate can call for what it pleases."

Dorsey led the committee through a maze of million-dollar figures he said showed that while up until 1929 a total of $100,000,000 had been invested in the Alabama Power Co., this had been written up to a book value of $166,000,000.

He told of making an earlier appraisal of the company for the Alabama public service commission, which showed in 1923 an investment of $18,000,000, with the company claiming a book value of $35,000,000 and the commission permitting a rate-making basis of $33,000,000.

A reduction was ordered later, he said, but there was "no real evidence" of how much the rate base was cut in that process.

Entering into the rate base, he said, was a $2,750,000 item for the value of water-power sites which had cost the company nothing.

Drys Will Select Nominee in May

A candidate bearing the banenr of the Prohibition Party will be in the Presidential race again this year. He will be chosen at the party convention in Niagara Falls, May 5, 6 and 7.

Plans for this convention were outlined here yesterday by Edward E. Blake, of Chicago, national chairman of the Prohibition Party, who spoke at a gathering of prohibitionists at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Blake predicted that the Niagara Falls convention would be "the largest in 25 years and the most representative."

Yesterday's meeting elected the following as delegates to the convention: the Rev. Thomas E. Boarde, the Rev. A. K. Lindsley, William V. Mahoney and J. Raymond Schmidt. Dr. Alice Caporn and Miss Helen Smith were mentioned as alternates. James A. Edgerton, of nearby Virginia, who was the party's Presidential candidate in 1928, attended the meeting.

Roosevelt Whirlwind Tax Program Stuns Congress; Radical Innovation Requires Study.

By Franklyn Waltman

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT led Congressional leaders to believe he would ask them to enact a "windfall" tax. His program when it was formally unfolded turned out to be a whirlwind which stunned those on Capitol Hill, leaving them gasping for breath and searching for experts to explain to them what the plan to use taxes to force the distribution of corporate earnings really meant.

Snap judgment and dogmatic conclusions about the wisdom and probable results of this legislation are dangerous. The most intelligent comment on Capitol Hill came from Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee, who said: "This proposal requires special study." It certainly needs that—and Congress should summon the best authorities it can find to explore all possible consequences of the radical innovations proposed by the President before acting.

One thought seemed to cause widespread mental disturbances on Capitol Hill. It was this: Would not the President's plan to force distribution of all corporate earnings accelerate dangerous boom movements in good years, and thus, by weakening corporate structures, would it not add to the severity of depressions in the lean years? If that is so, what happens then to all the talk of the last three or four years about stabilizing business operations and ironing out the peaks and valleys of prosperity and depression?

These are questions for the economists and business experts to answer. But it is apparent to even the simplest mind that if corporations distribute all their earnings in the good years, they will have no funds to carry them over the bad years. What then? Is the answer that in the bad years hereafter the Government will have to supply the funds to sustain the corporations of the country? If so, would not the improvident, poorly managed corporation be treated as well as the efficient corporation? Would that not place a premium on improvidence and bad management? In the end, would not the Government be left owning all the corporate wrecks?

Undoubtedly the experts will differ in their views of the probable effects of this legislation and the correct answer will not be known until the plan has been given a trial. Thus, a business-reform measure in the guise of a revenue law, if it is passed, will constitute another experiment of the type which unsettles the confidence of business and investors.

Incidentally, first reports regarding the identity of the author of this tax proposal named Herman Oliphant, general counsel of the Treasury. Some think Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, lent a helping hand. Mr. Oliphant is regarded as an unusually able lawyer, but his work as an economist has not been such as to encourage confidence. Mr. Oliphant was the moving spirit behind the silver program, which has ended in a debacle.

* * *

The following item has nothing to do with taxes, but it is too good to hold any longer. The action of the Supreme Court in upholding the constitutionality of the Hawes-Cooper prison-made good act recalls that in 1930 various State Governors were considerably exercised over the effect that legislation would have on their penal problem.

Meeting as the Governors' Conference at Salt Lake City that year, the State executives devoted a full session to the discussion of this legislation, which had been passed in the previous year. Governor after Governor arose and pointed out the seriousness of the problem of depriving them of the ability to keep their prisoners profitably employed.

Finally a handsome, majestic figure arose and declared that he "would go even one step further," that he regarded the Hawes-Cooper act "very distinctly as an invasion of what I call State home rule."

"I go one step further and doubt very much the constitutionality of that act," he asserted, adding: "It seems to be that it is incumbent upon some of us to test, when the time comes, the constitutionality of the Hawes-Cooper bill. It seems to me that the whole question of Federal interference with the freedom of interstate shipments is not only involved in this particular act, but is being extended by a great many other acts, so as to prevent the inherent constitutional right of the free shipment of goods from one State to another . . .

"This is a matter of community of interest between the States," he said. "It seems to me Federal interference is not only preventing that kind of co-operation between States, but it is also laying down a new proposal, which is contrary to the original purpose and intent of the act of union."

No, the speaker was not Albert C. Ritchie. It was Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Governor of New York.

Leave Bills Accord Reached

gress some actual facts on over time work on which to base future remedial legislation.

The House bill had provided that employes could apply overtime work to vacation periods, but the Senate had disallowed this provision and substituted a provision for a study of the overtime practice.

A minor amendment was made in the section dealing with corporations controlled by the Federal Government to insure the application of the annual and sick leave bills to the employes of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Ramspeck said that he will call up the conference report at the first opportunity, but this probably will be Thursday. The report then will go to the Senate for approval and finally to the White House for the President's signature.

No further opposition is anticipated and the President is expected to approve the measures, which will restore many privileges taken away from Government workers by the first economy act.

Steward's Statement.

The following statement on the leave bills was made by Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees:

"The conference report on the sick and annual leave bills marks an improvement on the measures as passed by the Senate, and the National Federation of Federal Employes believes that the report should be accepted by the House and that the legislation should be signed by the President. While the measures leave something to be desired, they do represent a vast improvement over present deplorable conditions, and they provide a substantial basis upon which to work for still further betterment of the whole Federal employment situation. Toward this goal the National Federation of Federal Employes will continue to direct its efforts.

"On behalf of our organization, I desire to express thanks to the conferees for the admirable cooperative spirit evidenced."

President Claude Babcock of the American Federation of Government Employes said in part:

"Terms of the conference report on the leave bills are highly gratifying to me. We are grateful to the many members of Congress who have given their co-operation and support for these bills, and to the American Federation of Labor for the effectiveness with which it has furthered the campaign of its Government affiliates."

Kansas Is Ruled Unable to Share In Social Funds

Board Cites Landon Order Denying Supervision of County Money.

By the Associated Press.

The Social Security Board advised Kansas yesterday that the State's plans for old age assistance, aid for dependent children and aid for the blind did not meet requirements for Federal help.

John G. Winant, board chairman, made known the ruling in a letter to John G. Stutz, executive director of the Kansas emergency relief committee.

Among other objections to the Kansas plan, Winant said an executive order by Gov. Alf M. Landon "does not give supervisory powers to the Kansas emergency relief committee with respect to funds supplied by counties."

Stresses 3 Sections.

Winant emphasized three sections of the social security act with which, he said, the Kansas plans did not comply:

"(1) That a State plan shall 'provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them.'

"(2) That assistance to the aged, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind shall consist of money payments.

"(3) That there shall be a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan."

Landon Silent.

Topeka, Kans., March 3 (AP).—Gov. Alf M. Landon, slightly ill with a cold, could not be reached for comment on the ruling of the Federal Security Board today that Kansas' plans for aiding the aged, blind, and dependent children, did not meet requirements for Federal help.

While no officials would comment publicly, several admitted privately a special session of the Legislature might be necessary if Kansas were to participate in the social security program immediately.

Some pointed out however, that there was doubt as to whether the Legislature had authority to enact laws to meet the requirements of the Security Board.

Under the Kansas constitution, care of the poor is made a direct responsibility of the counties. This clause, it was said, raised doubt as to just how far the Legislature might go in enacting laws that would meet the demands of the Federal Government.

Reserve Bank Post Taken From Norris

Philadelphia, March 3 (AP).—George W. Norris, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia for 16 years, has been denied a new term because of age.

The directors reappointed him Thursday for a five-year term as president, the new title of the office, but the board of governors of the system refused approval.

Norris is 71. He said the board's reference to mandatory retirement "is disingenuous and deceptive," and he will leave it to "an informed and intelligent public to judge whether the reasons assigned by the board of governors are their real reasons." Norris has been a Democrat in national policies.

The board of governors deferred action on the appointment of William M. Hutt, jr., as first vice president.

The Washington Federal Reserve officials advised the Philadelphia board that its policy is not to approve appointment of a president or first vice president who is 70 or who will reach that age before the end of the five years.

Dirigible-Plane For $1,500,000 Urged on Army

Drive for Naval Air Base in Oregon Opposed by Admiral's Report.

By the Associated Press.

A combination dirigible and airplane, designed for long-range scouting and bombing duty, was sought for the Army Air Corps yesterday, in a bill prepared by Representative John D. Dingell (Democrat), Maryland.

The bill would authorize a $1,500,000 appropriation, to enable the Secretary of War to have the craft built on designs that Dingell said were submitted by George W. Hardin, of Tennessee, and approved by Dr. Alexander Klemin, of the Guggenheim School of Aeronautics, and Ralph H. Upson, of Ann Arbor, Mich., designer of the Navy's "tin blimp."

Dingell described it as a "detachable composite aircraft, capable of transatlantic service" He said it consisted of a metal dirigible with an airplane attached, and a cabin common to both. Dingell said it was so designed that if trouble should overtake either unit in flight, the dirigible or the airplane could be detached, to avoid a crack-up with the crew.

Navy Air Base.

By the United Press.

The campaign of Oregon Congressmen for a $3,000,000 Navy air base, at Tongue Point, Oreg., ran into opposition yesterday when Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews filed a report with the House Naval Affairs Committee against it.

A bill to authorize the expenditure was intpoduced by Representative James W. Mott (Republican), Oregon, in connection with the Wilcox act, passed last session, designed eventually to set up a ring of such bases on United States coasts and frontiers.

Andrews objected that the Tongue Point site on the Columbia River was inferior to other sites available in the area.

Merle Chessman, Astoria publisher, and head of the Columbia Defense League, said the region was badly in need of defenses, and said there were none from San Francisco to Puget Sound.

Shouse Denies Breckinridge's Tie With League

Liberty Head Declares Foe of Roosevelt Is Not a Member of Group.

By the Associated Press.

Jouett Shouse, president of the American Liberty League, said yesterday his organization was not in anyway connected with the candidacy of Col. Henry Breckinridge, of New York, for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Breckinridge has announced plans to enter the Presidential primaries in Maryland and Ohio.

Shouse said that Breckinridge "is not, and never has been, a member of the league."

Referring to statements he attributed to spokesmen of Roosevelt that the league is composed of "apostles of entrenched greed," Shouse said:

"It would be unfair to Col. Breckinridge to permit to go unchallenged the assertion that he is connected in any way with this unspeakable organization."

Coalition Approved.

New York, March 3 (AP).—Charles D. Hilles, Republican national committeeman for New York, voiced conditional approval tonight of proposals for a coalition of Republicans and Democrats at odds with the Administration.

"I think we should not close the door to the idea of a nationalistic movement," Hilles told the Ivy Republican Club.

He stressed, however, that "we must insist on the point of the futility of advocating a change in the party's name. But we can agree with them on the salient points of a platform. * * *

"Republicans for whose motives and opinions I have great respect would like us to nominate a Democrat on our ticket, and, if he is a superior man, give him first place," he said. "We cannot approve that suggestion, but there is much merit in the suggestion of utilizing, in important posts, thoroughly competent Democrats who are courageously resisting the President and his destructive doctrines."

New York's 90 delegate votes probably will not be cast as a unit at Cleveland, Hilles predicted.

He expressed a preference for an uninstructed delegation, asserting "I think geography should not be a controlling factor in choosing our candidate," and added, "there has been very little resistance to the contention that the candidate shall come out of the West."

Democratic Day.

Portland, Me., March 3 (AP).—Democratic joy over a huge city election victory in Lewiston declined today, as losses were reported in three other Maine cities.

Republicans took over control of Saco yesterday, for the first time in five years, and retained their hold on Waterville and Bath.

AAA Prepares To Launch New Farm Program

By the Associated Press.

Major executives of the AAA headed for Memphis and Chicago yesterday to launch the new $500,000,000 soil conservation-subsidy program at regional meetings of farm representatives.

Representatives of the Soil Conservation Service, the Agriculture Department solicitor's office, statisticians and economists accompanied them. The three-day conference will open tomorrow.

A report of the AAA comptroller made public before the delegations entrained, showed that $580,821,074 was paid to approximately 3,000,000 farmers in 1935 under the invalidated agricultural adjustment act.

There are about 6,000,000 farmers in the Nation. All are eligible to share in subsidies under the new farm relief plan, but officials forecast individual payments would be smaller.

(At the regional meetings, AAA officials are expected to disclose administrative deails whereby $500,000,000 will be paid in Federal subsidies to farmers for diverting land to soil conservation and other economic uses.)

Secretary Wallace, who will leave tonight for Memphis and go to Chicago Saturday, halted preparations for the trip to make a brief radio address in which he said:

"I believe that under this new program we can do a more constructive job of putting a firm physical base under our civilization than has ever been done by any great nation with a continental climate."

The Secretary said that the regional meetings, including those at New York City and Salt Lake City next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, "will doubtles throw much light upon the administrative problems we face."

Speed is necessary, Wallace said, because cotton planting already has been started in the South and planting of other major crops will begin shortly. He emphasized that "production control of individual farm commodities is simply not possible under this plan. There will be no contracts between the Government and individual farmers."

The AAA benefit payments for 1935 were divided as follows:

Cotton producers, $130,969,459; wheat, $106,874,715; tobacco, $34,259,172; corn-hog, $237,872,609; sugar, $57,032,892; rice, $9,383,015; peanuts, $2,429,249.

Police Battle Mob in Boston Garment Strike

Clubs, Fists Fly as Group Attempts to Seize 3 Girl Workers.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, March 3.—Thirty club swinging policemen and hundreds of strikers and sympathizers engaged in a rough-and-tumble fight tonight, in the most serious violence to mark a ladies garment workers' strike here. Philip Kramer, strike leader, was one of three men arrested.

It was the first riot to mark the six-day strike.

The trouble started when three girls emerged from their shop after the time limit agreed on by police and manufacturers.

Three men, including Kramer, were seized at the automobile.

Strikers swarmed around. Fists began to fly. Police drew their clubs. For several minutes the officers rained blows indiscriminately before peace was restored.

Kramer, international vice president of the Ladies' Garment Union, Mayer Karesky, 46, and Hyman Forman, 41, were booked for assault and battery "on persons unknown."

Only yesterday Kramer pleaded innocent to a charge of assaulting a worker and was released for hearing March 13.

Lieut. Harold Mitten, in charge of the police detail, said the three men tried to drag the girl workers from the automobile.

Mitten said the manufacturers had agreed to release their workers at a specified time to insure plenty of police protection. When the girls emerged nearly three hours later many officers had been relieved in the belief the shops were empty.

Sergt. Henry Bailey ordered the clubs drawn when the crowd struggled, he said, to free the three prisoners. The officers battled their way to a police box across the street and the warfare continued until after the trio had been hustled into a patrol wagon.

Lieut. Mitten said he believed one of the girls in the automobile had been injured. As the police dragged the men away from the machine, the driver speeded off, sideswiping another car. The identity of those in the car was not learned.

Baby's Long Coma Baffles Physicians

Erie, Pa., March 3 (AP).—Baby Maxine Yarrington slumbered on tonight, six months after she lapsed into a strange coma at the home of parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Yarrington.

Doctors and nurses gathered around her crib, tried again in vain to bring a flash of recognition to her wide-open blue eyes.

Physicians have asserted the 2½-year-old child probably will be an invalid if she awakens from her long sleep caused by Encephalitis Lethargica.

Sister M. Alicia, supervisor of the children's ward, who has taken over direct care of the infant, feeding her soft food from a spoon, said:

"She must have gained 15 pounds since entering here six months ago."

But, she lies quietly in her crib. She doesn't even react to waving of hands before her staring eyes. She moves only slightly, to change her position in the crib.

Suspect Confesses Ballston Bank Raid

Smiling and apparently relieved that his flight from the law was ended, Dennis B. McDaniel, 35, paroled San Quentin convict and confessed robber of the Old Dominion Bank of Ballston, Va., pleaded guilty yesterday when he was arraigned before United States Commissioner John Barton Phillips, in Alexandria.

Bond was fixed at $15,000.

Meanwhile Department of Justice agents sought McDaniel's brother, John Woodrow McDaniel, who was implicated in the signed confession as his confederate in the robbery, which netted $2,700.

Present at McDaniel's arraignment was Fairfax County Police Sergt. Alton Shumate, whose clues guided the G-Men in their capture of the convict.

McDaniel said yesterday he was a native of Covington, Va.

Liner's Crew to Ballot On Strike Truce Offer

San Pedro, Calif., March 3 (AP).—Striking crew members of the Panama-Pacific intercoastal liner California, tied up here since early yesterday, ordered a secret ballot tonight on a compromise offer of the company in a wage dispute.

Terms of the offer were not disclosed. The unlicensed crew of 374 was said to be holding out for the West Coast wage scale, which is $5 a month higher than the East Coast wage, under which they signed in New York.

Several of the California's 441 passengers tired of waiting and transferred to railroads Eastward today.

W. H. Hoskier, Pacific Coast general manager of the steamship line, expressed hope the California could put to sea tomorrow.

Armed Veteran Declares War On New York Elevator Strikers

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—Tin-hatted and carrying a shotgun, Attorney Frederic C. Bellinger, son of a brigadier general and himself a World War veteran, prepared tonight to "fight force with force" and to "shoot it out" with building service strikers "if necessary."

Bellinger leaped to arms last night, when he heard a report the engineer of his fashionable Park avenue apartment home had been kidnaped. Police were unable to verify the kidnaping report, but the aroused Bellinger donned his Army helmet, pulled his shotgun from the rack, and went out to run the elevators.

Then it occurred to him other tenants should do the same, and the "Tenant's Defense League" was born.

"I'm going to protect my family," Bellinger declared today, between telephone calls from other tenants, who, he said, wanted to enroll in the league.

"I didn't interfere with their (the strikers') families, and they are not going to jeopardize mine. I'm going to shoot it out, if necessary."

Bellinger said he would spend tonight teaching tenants how to run elevators, and declared that before long "we'll have pickets out on the line with those fellows."

He disclaimed connection with any landlord group. Landlords, he said, are not eligible for membership in the league.

Bellinger said his league had three aims, which he listed as follows:

1. A demand that landlords refuse to re-employ strikers.
2. Boycott of "closed shop" apartments by tenants.
3. No tips or Christmas presents to strikers ever again, if they are re-employed.

Bellinger said the organization was growing hourly, but wouldn't say how big it was.

Bellinger is a son of Brig. Gen. John B. Bellinger, assistant paymaster of the Army. He is a member of the law firm of Coudert brothers, and a nephew of Frederic R. Coudert, sr.

He is a member of the Union Club, the Republican Club, the National Club and several others.

N. Y. Strike Parley Fails

controls about 300 buildings in New York City, employing 2,500 service workers. Today the department agreed to sign a contract with the union. Service immediately was restored to all buildings controlled by the department.

In the Wall Street sector the strikers were badly defeated. Bambrick sent a "flying squadron" of about 20 strikers into the New York Stock Exchange Building in an attempt to persuade the elevator operators and furnacemen to walk out. The strikers were met by stock exchange guards and police, who chased them back uptown. That was the "little surprise" Bambrick had promised. He took all the blame for its failure.

"I called it off myself," he said, but did not explain why the coup was attempted anyway.

As usual there was wide divergence between the claims of the strikers and realty advisory board. The union claimed 6,000 buildings were affected and that 78,000 workers were on strike.

The realty board said only 500 buildings were without service.

Police headquarters, making a neutral check-up, reported the strike had affected 1,303 buildings, but made no attempt to estimate how many workers were on strike.

Violence continued, but most of the casualties reported were nothing more serious than bloody noses and whacks over the head. Property damage consisted chiefly of bricks thrown through glass doors of apartment and office buildings. Strikers patrolled the East side in taxicabs, occasionally "kidnaping" strike breakers.

Bambrick went into the mayor's conference still making these demands in behalf of the union:

A $2-a-week increase in wages.
A 48-hour week.
Time and a half for overtime.
A closed shop.

The strike spread today to a few of the larger hotels, but the titans of New York's skyline still were unscathed. Bambrick had threatened to call out the employes in the Empire State building, Chrysler Tower, Graybar Building and Rockefeller Center, but tonight elevators still were running in all those places, and the vast furnaces were sending out heat.

Strikebreakers operated in many sections, and Pearl Bergoff—the "red terror" who makes a business of breaking strikes—was sending out squads of his broad-shouldered, hard-faced employes to take over elevators and heating plants.

Pinch of the strike was felt most in Manhattan and the Bronx.

In no two buildings was the situation the same. In some apartments tenants equipped themselves with shotguns and ran the elevators; strikebreakers worked in others; some buildings were neglected by the strikers, and puzzled employes continued on the job wondering why the call had not come.

Calls poured into the board of health, which had instructions to send police or firemen to run elevators in buildings more than six stories high in which there was illness.

Many buildings operated skeleton service, putting the elevators on schedule similar to the way in which trains run. The cars would go down on the half hour and the hour, and up on the quarter hours.

5 Bandits Take $25,000 In Florida Bank Holdup

Tampa, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Five bandits held up the Columbia Bank, of Ybor City, today and escaped with an estimated $25,000. The bandits entered the bank quietly, John Lazzari, assistant teller, said. Only one customer was present.

"This is a stickup," one of the men called. The five bank employes and the customer were covered by shotguns and revolvers. All were made to lie face down, while the men took all the cash in sight.

Pembroke, Ontario, March 3 (AP). A crowd of relief recipients, demanding elimination of food allowance reductions, held Mayor A. E. Cockburn and members of the Pembroke council prisoners in the city hall for several hours tonight.

The city officials were allowed to depart after a parish priest had intervened and the mayor had promised to cancel the cuts.

22 Policemen To Lose Badges In Lottery Case

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, March 3.—Twenty-two city policemen, including six sergeants, today were suspended and ordered stripped of their badges and other equipment, after the grand jury named them in presentments resulting from its investigation of supposed lottery rackets in Baltimore.

Eight officers who had previously been presented on bribery charges also were named in further charges of conspiracy. They had been suspended from the department after the first charges were made against them by the grand jury.

All 30 police officers were accused of conspiracy with alleged numbers operators to violate the State lottery laws. The new names reported to the grand jury today are Sergts. Edward Holthaus, Michael B. Command, Robert A. Weidner, Diderich H. Classen, Louis Cohen and William J. Keogh.

Patrolmen Herman R. Trautner, Arthur T. Guntrum, George D. Price, Louis C. Rehak, John M. Voelker, John J. McClusky, William H. Gardner, Albert Meinschein, Edward F. Swartz, James A. Horner, William E. Conroy, Charles W. Frizzell, Wilborn B. Nelson, Clarence Smith, Louis Mohr and Harry W. Hinkel.

The officers named in both conspiracy and bribery charges are Lieut. Edward L. Hitzelberger, Sergts. Joseph S. Seidl, Edward L. Quinan, Martin J. Lindung and John W. Simpson; Patrolmen Walter Pruett, Robert Hardesty and William Gray.

Police Commissioner Charles D. Gaither announced immediately after the presentments were returned that each of the officers would be summoned to district headquarters and stripped of his police equipment. Each would be suspended and taken to court to arrange bail, he added.

State's Attorney J. Bernard Wells asked that bail for each be set at $5,000. The presentments had asked for $25,000 in bond for each, but the State's Attorney had said this was reduced after a conference with the court.

The 30 officers were named today in four presentments, a legal formality required of Maryland grand juries in naming the accused before the defendants are formally indicted.

One presentment charges 26 officers with conspiracy with Thomas R. Smith, Negro Democratic political leader; Charles Gaither, Clarence Green, and others already under presentment, as members of an alleged "numbers" group.

The other policemen were named on the other three presentments, in connection with previous charges made by the grand jury, in connection with three additional alleged "numbers" groups.

Train Kills Youth; 2 Companions Held

A 19-year-old youth was killed instantly yesterday when he was crushed beneath the wheels of a fast-moving freight train which he attempted to board in the Benning railroad yards at Thirty-fourth and E streets southeast.

The youth, Roy Sherwood, 19, of Badaxe, Mich., with two companions, Roy Wood, 18, and Charles O'Mara, 23, of the same town, was on his way to Baltimore where he intended to leave for his home.

According to his companions, who are being held at the Eleventh Precinct Station pending an investigation, Roy had run alongside the train and was ready to jump on when his foot slipped. The wheels ran over his body, police reported the boys as saying.

Four Assassins Wound Wealthy Cuban, Guard

Havana, March 3 (AP).—Four assassins failed today in an effort to kill Nocolas Castano, wealthy businessman and former kidnap victim. Castano and a federal soldier, serving as his bodyguard, were slightly wounded by shotgun slugs as they rode in an automobile on the famous Malecon boulevard, near Maceo Park, almost in the center of Havana.

Castano was kidnaped several months ago and was released by soldiers who captured the kidnapers.

Flames Follow Blasts In Detroit; 3 Injured

Detroit, March 3 (AP).—Three sharp underground explosions tossed manhole covers along a downtown street into the air here today. Three workmen sent to fight the flames which followed were injured slightly.

John Mason, inspector for the Detroit street railways, said the blasts were caused by gas which had leaked into power conduits of the railways system. The current in the area was cut off while workmen repaired the leak in the gas main.

with respect to the business affairs of all businessmen engaged in commerce, and with respect to the relations of such men to all other persons, whether or not so engaged.

"In view of the extraordinary nature of the power to be given, there must necessarily exist the gravest question concerning the validity of such a grant."

Elisha Hanson, counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers Association, told the committee that the bill was nothing more nor less than an attempt to set up an American OGPU for the harrassment of business.

William L. Daley, Washington manager of the National Editorial Association, read a statement by Robert H. Pritchard, president of the association, discussing prevention of deceptive advertising. Hanson had contended that newspapers had better facilities for checking on advertising than the Government possessed, and that they were just as careful about advertising policy.

"If your committee is inclined to sympathize with the commission's bid for power, perhaps it would be best to define particular acts which constitute deception." Pritchard's statement said. "This authority sought by the commission would permit this agency to settle all questions of doubt, which baffle scientists."

In attacking the Robinson-Patman bill, the chain store organization said it would have two principal results:

"The place of the middleman and broker in our system of distribution would be established and maintained by legislative fiat. As a consequence, there would be a material increase in the spread between the producer and consumer.

"The consumer's cost of living would be substantially increased, because it is he who must finally pay all costs of distribution, whether necessary or unnecessary."

In addition, the organization said, eventual results would include:

"The elimination of stabilized production, which so often makes it possible for manufacturers, particularly small ones, to produce goods for large buyers during the off-peak season, thereby lowering prices to all buyers and consumers; and the emphasis of 'peaks and valleys' of production, with attendant seasonal lay-offs of labor.

"The freezing of the price level, with much greater attendant advantage, in the long run, to large buyers than to small ones.

"The subsidizing of the middleman at the expense of a vastly larger and vocally less powerful group, the consumers.

"Harassing bureaucratic control over industry by the Federal Trade Commission, similar to that exercized by the NRA.

"Unwarranted interference with business, in direct contrast with the President's promise of a 'breathing spell' to business."

The organization pointed out that the bill had been reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee without hearings.

"By increasing the price of goods to the consumer, the bill would have the immediate and inevitable effect of reducing consumption. This, in return, would reduce manufacturing volume, and thus necessitate lower wages or the laying off of labor."

Former Officer Opens His Race For Presidency

From Lonely D. C. Precinct Beat to White House Is Overstreet's Aim.

From a lonely beat in a Washington police precinct to the White House—that's the trail Howard M. Overstreet would like to blaze for himself, and last night he set out to do it, just as President Roosevelt, himself, would have done, by making a speech on the radio.

Unfortunately, the station from which Overstreet made his speech was WOL, which is a very nice radio station, indeed, but not very powerful and reaches, for the most part, only citizens of Washington who aren't really citizens at all because they haven't any vote.

Overstreet paid $25 (the cost of making a 15-minute speech on WOL) for his oversight, but his address, which was the first step he has taken in the direction of the White House since he turned in his badge and announced himself a candidate two weeks ago, was worth it, his hearers agreed.

Credits Grandfather.

In the first place, Overstreet explained that he might still be a policeman instead of a Presidential candidate if it hadn't been for his grandfather in Texas. The old gentleman always said, Overstreet related, that the country was going to pot and while that was all of 25 years ago (Overstreet) doesn't see where conditions had improved any.

Even the platform on which Overstreet is running was suggested by his grandfather. It contains, among other things, a sock-the-bankers plank and a plank for more apartment houses.

Overstreet, obviously, has been studying closely the tactics of other politicians. Taking a tip from the national committees of the major parties, he saw to it that all newspaper offices were furnished with advance copies of his speech.

Recalls Lincoln, Jackson.

Then, when it came time to account for a policeman having aspirations to become President, he remembered that Presidential speechmakers have done in and out of season. He remembered Lincoln and Jackson. He said:

"I am just another man from a log cabin who is trying to get into the White House."

Overstreet called his speech the "crowbar of my campaign." When he is elected—Overstreet is careful never to indicate that the outcome of his race may be doubtful—he is going to build enough apartment houses to hold everybody at rents all can pay. The apartments may even have elevators, but that depends upon how tall Overstreet decides they shall be.

Would Cut Living Costs.

The next after-election step will be to order the cost of food and clothing reduced. That accomplished, all that will remain for President Overstreet to do will be to find jobs for everyone.

President Roosevelt needn't think he's going to get off with a WOL address from Candidate Overstreet. Before he finished speaking last night, Overstreet challenged the President to a debate on prosperity, the "how and why not." Overstreet suggested a joint assembly of the House and Senate for the occasion.

A legion spokesman called up The Post after the meeting to say that Overstreet had been given "the courtesy of the floor," it was to be distinctly understood that it's against the organization's constitution to indorse political candidates.

Aid Sole Topic For Maryland's Special Session

Both Parties Back Limits Imposed in Resolution Drawn by Tydings.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., March 3.—Members of the special session of the Maryland General Assembly, gathered in party caucus tonight, adopted a resolution drawn by Senator Millard Tydings confining legislative deliberations and completion of the executive mansion.

The political meetings of both parties, held in the two chambers of the State House and at a local hotel prior to the beginning of the session tomorrow at noon, were attended only by a few members from the Eastern Shore, while the majority were from the mainland. Fourteen delegates from the Eastern Shore could not reach Annapolis due to a temporary halt in boat service. The Republicans, holding an informal meeting at Carvel Hall rather than a true caucus, approved the Washington resolution.

The 78 Democratic delegates unanimously re-elected Emanuel Gorfine (Democrat), of Baltimore, speaker of the House for the extra session. No one else was nominated. Gorfine was put forth by Delegate George Greisaker (Democrat), of Baltimore.

The threatened county revolt among Democrats in the House, aimed at a reorganization including the ousting of the present House speaker, was called off tonight a few hours prior to party caucuses.

Mullikin, who had previously attended a conference of legislative chieftains in Washington summoned by United States Senator Millard Tydings, said no action would be taken at this time to depose Manuel Gorne (Democrat), Baltimore, as speaker.

His announcement followed a meeting of the rebel bloc. He explained that the revolt was called off "to enable the Democratic Party to function properly in the approaching elections." He declined to enlarge on his statement.

Jackson Withdraws.

However, another member of the "county revolt" said that Mayor Howard W. Jackson, bitter enemy of William Curran, whose power the county factionists sought to break, had withdrawn his support from realignment in the House.

The same delegate stated that the agreement came after the conference in Washington. He said Senator Tydings, after hearing the grievances of the revolting bloc to the effect that too many Curran men were on important House committees, urged that the committees should be more balanced. This redistribution is to be made sometime this week, after Gorfine is sworn in.

It is understood that even if Mayor Jackson's power is alienated the county would have sufficient strength to oust Gorfine as speaker. If such a move by Gorfine is not made to place more county men on House committees, then the county bloc will fight to oust Gorfine.

At the same time, the legislator said that some sort of agreement had been reached between Mayor Jackson and Senator Tydings by which Mayor Jackson will gain support for the gubernatorial election in 1938.

Legislators Gather.

Legislators, with the exception of those from the Eastern Shore, arrived throughout the day for caucuses preliminary to the meeting of the extra session at noon tomorrow, called by Gov. Harry W. Nice to disentangle knotty relief problems.

Meanwhile, Senators gathered in the Senate chamber to informally discuss the relief situation. The majority of those present voiced sentiment against passage of a 1 per cent consumers' tax as recommended by the Casey relief committee appointed by Gov. Nice.

Several assemblymen said they had bills to introduce of a local nature, pointing out that the last session adjourned before a host of local legislation was acted upon. However, influential assemblymen said they thought legislative leaders would restrict all measures not pertinent to relief.

To Ask Speedy Session.

The general theory was that Governor Nice, in his message to the Assembly tomorrow, would ask for a speedy session to the exclusion of minor legislation. It was pointed out that there are 18,773 relief cases remaining over and above those absorbed by the Works Progress Administration and private industry. This number represents approximately 75,000 Marylanders who must be cared for by legislative provision. Only 24,500 relief clients have been absorbed by relief projects.

The consensus of legislative opinion was that the Legislature would last the entire 30 days, wrangling over the proposed consumers' tax. It was said that as the present gross receipts and automoile titling taxes are a compromise measure and had raised sufficient funds for relief and old-age pensions, they would be re-enacted for another year at the last moment.

Another problem to be taken up after relief is settled is an appropriation for completion of the executive mansion. Already $106,000 has been expended and approximately $30,000 more will be needed. This will be raised either by straight legislative appropriation or passing a bill to divert surplus funds from the Hall of Records account.

A resolution pledging the Democratic majority to limit legislation to emergency measures in the special session of the General Assembly was drawn up earlier in the day at a conference of outstanding Democrats in the office of Senator Millard E. Tydings in Washington.

Surprise Traffic Plans

hicles. Public utilities are not cooperating as they should, and neither are the drivers."

Violate Law.

"Don't street cars violate the law every day?" Schulte asked.

"Yes," replied Brown. "Not a day passes when street cars don't flagrantly violate the law by passing red lights and disregarding speed regulations. The present situation calls for drastic action, and I plan to call the conference this week."

Schulte then cited six deaths attributed to street cars this year.

"If a street car motorman doesn't hit you, he sticks his head out the window and curses you because he missed," Schulte declared.

Brown agreed with this statement and added:

"One street car hit a police cruiser the other day, and the motorman wanted to get out and fight the policeman."

Constantly Warned.

Later in the hearing, Melvin Sharpe, executive assistant to President Hanna of the Capital Transit Co., and Edward D. Merrill, president of the Washington Rapid Transit Co., testified that bus and street car operators are constantly warned not to violate traffic laws.

"If we find a willful violation among our bus drivers, that driver is promptly discharged," said Merrill.

"We welcome complaints that our operators are negligent. We are naturally chagrined, but immediately see to it that punishment is meted accordingly," said Sharpe.

"I don't believe bus and street car operators should be allowed to speed and pass red lights, regardless of whatever schedules they must maintain," said Representative Carpenter. "The offenders should be punished, and forced to pay fines."

Representative Wood then struck at District parking problems. He cited flagrant infractions of parking rules and said:

No Parking Sign.

"If a 'no parking' sign doesn't mean just that, it should be taken down. The law should be enforced, regardless of Congressional tags or anything else—it doesn't take long to make out a 'ticket.'"

He continued a stormy tirade against Congressional tag owners who defiantly overlook traffic regulations.

"Frequently, a member of Congress thinks he is important enough to say 'You can't arrest me!' For some reason, he thinks he is called upon to tell the public that he 'can't be arrested.'

"He should be arrested, and I'll be glad to see it done—in fact, it has been done. This is the first year I have had Congressional tags on my car. And I received a ticket. I even noticed that other cars parked where I was didn't have tickets. So, I guess it can be done."

Parking Conditions.

Wood then assailed parking conditions in general. He said parked cars contributed to the hazards of driving, and caused accidents. He urged Maj. Brown to "crack down" on this angle of traffic enforcement.

Corporation Counsel Prettyman was the committee's first witness. He pointed out that 26,662 traffic cases were handled by his office last year, and condemned present procedure in Police Court (including the traffic branch) as "wasteful, slow and uncertain."

"Judges and prosecutors are doing the best they can," he said. "But the system of prosecution is all wrong. It should be changed. Police Court, on any morning, is a madhouse. There is no efficiency."

He then outlined the present system, explaining functions of all four courts—United States, District of Columbia, Jury and Traffic branches. He said that 54,000 cases a year are handled by four judges.

Testimony Concluded.

His testimony concluded with urgent requests that a system of magistrate courts be established. These courts, he said, could be located in various police precinct stations, and could be presided over "by retired Government officials."

Petty cases involving traffic infractions are not complicated, and include no weighty problems of law, Prettyman said. Under Washington's present court system, with its noise, clamor and confusion, the enactment of justice "is absolutely devoid of necessary dignity, deliberation and accuracy."

Prettyman also assailed so-called "informations"—written forms filed in Police Court with each case.

"These informations are useless," he said. "It takes time and futile effort to make them out. They must pass from hand to hand, and finally come to rest in musty court files. There is no reason, in minor traffic cases, why the policeman's verbal complaint is not sufficient."

He outlined four types of cases which could be handled by magistrate courts:

Violations of traffic regulations (speed offenses and failure to exhibit driving permit); intoxication, disorderly conduct and violations of police regulations (health law, etc.).

Richmond B. Keech, representing the Public Utilities Commission, was next to testify. He told the committee that Washington now has 4,100 taxis, 700 street cars and 350 buses. He advocated a regulation limiting the number of taxis, explaining that his commission does not have that power.

Carpenter referred to Maj. Brown's "crack down" order, governing public vehicle drivers.

"We are right behind the police force, and will back them in all their efforts," said Keech.

He said that although Washington has an adequate number of street cars and buses, they are not operating to expedite traffic.

Wood protested against "repeated morning tie-ups of street cars.

"There seems to be something wrong with them all the time—something should be done," he declared.

Inept Drivers Problem Here, Schuldt Finds

Tells House Group Rigid, Frequent Examinations Are Needed.

Judge Gus A. Schuldt, of Police Court, told the sub-committee on District appropriations that the trouble with Washington's traffic is that there are too many incompetent drivers, a transcript of the hearings revealed yesterday.

Answering questions of committee members, Judge Schuldt said:

"I think there ought to be a severe examination in the beginning, and there ought to be periodical examinations. I think lots of people are driving cars who have no business doing so. They have not the psychological aspect of driving a car."

Judge Schuldt said that 30,000 traffic cases had been handled by the court last year, but only 20 per cent were repeaters.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, appearing before the same sub-committee, asked but did not get more money than allowed by the Budget Bureau for installation of signal lights.

He also made another appeal for enactment into law a bill requiring periodical inspection of all motor vehicles. The measure passed the House last year, but was held up in the Senate.

Asked by Chairman Blanton the present status of the bill, Van Duzer said:

"I think it's in the Budget Bureau now"

Amile Foresees Population Drop

America's estimated 12,000,000 unemployed were compared with horses last night by Representative Thomas R. Amlie (Progressive), Wisconsin in a debate on the New Deal.

He pointed to a decrease of from 22,000,000 horses in this country in 1920 to 14,000,000 in 1930 and hinted he expected "permanent unemployment" to sharply reduce the human population.

"That is a harsh analogy," he said, "but it is wholly applicable."

His opponent, Representative Kent Keller (Democrat), Illinois, stanchly defended the New Deal.

"Where national lines are drawn today," he said, "I am unable to see how a man can justify a vote against Roosevelt under any condition or circumstances."

Ben A. Harlan Is Named To Juvenile Court Unit

Ben A. Harlan, executive secretary of the Acacia Mutual Life Association and a resident of Silver Spring, yesterday was appointed a member of the juvenile court committee for Montgomery County by Gov. Nice. He succeeds Elmer E. Boyner, who resigned because he is leaving the county.

Harlan is a prominent Republican and is active in the Thirteenth District Republican Club.

Federal Share Equal To 49c Per $100 Tax

The sub-committee on District apporpirations, in slashing $3,000,000 from the United States lump sum payment, made much of the $1.50 tax rate in Washington.

If that tax rate were applied to the nontaxable Federal property in Washington, the District government would collect $8,250,000 instead of $2,700,000 as a "contribution."

The tax assessor's office values Federal property in the National Capital at $550,000,000. If the $2,700,000 is to be considered a tax on this property, the rate would be only 49 cents on $100 instead of the "low" $1.50 paid by Washingtonians.

Veteran Group Told to Spend Bonus Wisely

World War veterans were warned last night against becoming spendthrifts when they receive their bonus bonds by Senator James F. Byrnes Democrat), South Carolina.

Several score other Senators and Representatives heard him speak at a dinner honoring James E. Van Zandt, Veterans of Foreign Wars national commander, in the Press Club.

Other notables present included Senator Joseph T. Robinson, the Democratic leader, and Representatives John W. McCormack (Massachusetts), Democrat, and Fred Vinson (Kentucky), Democrat.

Byrnes defended passage of the bonus bill.

"There was nothing too good for the soldiers in 1918," he said. "They were paid the magnificent salary of $30 a month. Fifteen dollars of this went to their dependents, $6 for insurance and a substantial sum for liberty bonds. The rest was for riotous living.

"This amounted to $2.25 a day. Now I ask you, how many members of the National Economy League would go through the same thing for $2.25 a day?"

Van Zandt, responding to the tributes of Byrnes and George Brobeck, national legislative representative of the V. F. W. and toastmaster, assailed critics of the bonus.

He challenged the National Economy League, the United States Chamber of Commerce "and other defamers of the veterans" to "open their books, as we will ours."

He was interrupted by cheers and whistles of the thousand veterans present as he added:

"We are ready and eager to show you how our money is spent and for what it is spent. We dare them to be equally frank and above board."

Holdup Victims Identify Seven In Huge Lineup

82 Colored Men; 8 Women Questioned; Bandit Killer Believed Found.

Seven Negroes were identified as having participated in recent holdups and pocketbook snatchings out of the 82 colored men and 8 women who faced more than 150 victims in a huge line-up at police headquarters last night.

Police did not reveal his name, but said one of those identified might have been one of the "lunch-hour" bandits who killed a customer during the holdup of a Sanitary Grocery store last week.

He was picked out by a victim of a crime so similar to the one in which the murder occurred that police believe it was perpetrated by the same gang.

Those who faced the glaring lights at the two-hour roundup had been arrested by police during wholesale raids on colored hangouts Saturday, Sunday and yesterday.

Nearly 80 "undesirable colored men" were dragged into headquarters during yesterday's raids on poolrooms and "joints" in the Fourth Precinct. They were fingerprinted, questioned and held for the line-up.

Since the beginning of these raids there has been a marked drop in the number of holdups and housebreakings, Inspector Bernard W. Thompson said yesterday.

Meanwhile, police last night were looking for two colored boys who jumped on the running boards of cars early in the evening and snatched pocketbooks, the contents of which were valued at more than $50.

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet into a glass of water.

By the time it hits the bottom of the glass it is disintegrating.

IN 2 SECONDS BY STOP WATCH

What happens in these glasses happens in your stomach—Genuine BAYER Aspirin tablets start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

Three Bayer Aspirin tablets, crushed and dissolved in ½ glass of water as a gargle. Gargle with this mixture twice, holding your head well back to permit this medicated gargle to reach the irritated membranes of the throat.

Your doctor will approve this treatment as perhaps the quickest, simplest way known to fight cold and sore throat.

The Bayer Aspirin taken internally will combat a cold almost instantly, and ease the usual pains that accompany one. The gargle will ease sore throat in a few minutes. For it acts like a local anesthetic in relieving pain and rawness.

When you buy, though, see that you get real BAYER ASPIRIN tablets. For they dissolve almost instantly in the stomach and thus start working almost instantly. And they dissolve completely enough to use as a gargle. Watch out for this.

Vallee Protests Curb on Artists In Duffy Bill

Representatives Quarrel, Women Stare as Star Gives Testimony.

Rudy Vallee, blushing furiously at intervals, occasionaly fingering a gold ring on his left, or saxophone hand, and sometimes plucking at an adhesive-tape bandage on his right, or megaphone hand, stood before the House Patents Committee yesterday and earnestly defended what he called "the little fellows."

But Rudy was but part of the show in the House yesterday. At the hearing under Representative William Sirovich (Democrat), New York, so heated did proceedings become at times, and so divided was the committee opinion, that Mr. Sirovich later rose on the floor of the House and spoke for a full hour in attack on the Duffy bill, defense of his own substitute bill, and explanation of points at issue.

He was heckled intensively by Representative Marion Zioncheck (Democrat), Washington, who termed the hearings "a circus" and shouted repeatedly that ASCAP (the shortened name of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers) members were "racketeers" and "hold-up artists."

Star Assails Bill.

But the crooner, whose soft-singing voice has made him the idol of thousands of American women, and whose hard business head has made him an estimated average of nearly $10,000 a week for almost eight years, was, strangely enough, a dignified figure in contrast to the committee of bickering Congressmen.

The legislators fought and wrangled, interrupted each other and made sarcastic "apologies" in the two-hour morning session, while an audience of women—stenographers, clerks, building employes, and others attracted by the stage-screen-radio star—sat oblivious to the issues before the committee and stared at Rudy Vallee.

Vallee, in a deep baritone speaking voice, ill at ease before the Representatives, testified that he sincerely believed, after 16 years' experience in dance bands, the last eight on a national scale, that the Duffy bill would "damage irreparably" the creative inspiration of the country.

So sincere was this belief, he said, that he felt compelled to "warn my good friends, the organizations attacking the ASCAP that in that attack they are digging their own graves, and throwing a boomerang that will hurt them in the end."

He said he resented, as a native of New England, the appellation of "New York racketeer" allegedly bestowed on ASCAP members by committee members last week.

Material Makes Artist.

Vallee said:

"I put myself in jeopardy with the very organizations whom I must cultivate to continue professionally when I appear here against the Duffy bill. I have many friends throughout the country, in the motion picture industry, the broadcasting corporations, the hotel owners, the restaurant and cabaret owners and others.

"So I have no axe to grind. I am speaking for the small fellows, the men whose only source of income is from the tunes they write. I receive money from the moving pictures. I expect to make a movie about June. I receive money from phonograph records, which I will continue to make. I broadcast regularly. I have to seek work at all times from hotel and cabaret owners. I even hope to be a radio executive myself some day. So I have no ulterior motive.

"As a creator of some 20 popular songs, as a user of music, as an interpreter, and even as a consumer I must protest this bill. In it, I warn, the radio people in particular are killing the goose that lays the golden egg. For instance, in order to continue successfully on the radio, I must go through an average of 30 songs a week in an attempt to find five or six that will be worth playing on my program. I am very lucky to find two or three. That is why I so often have to use successful older songs, two or three years old.

"No artist in the field is better than his material. Without it the whole house of cards will fall. This bill tends to remove any remaining incentive for the creative artists of the country to write popular songs. There is very little incentive now. The voracious appetite of the radio makes it necessary for a song writer to write 50 songs a year, instead of 5 or 6, since the songs grow old so quickly. This makes for hack work, and even more so when one considers that the writer's remuneration is even less then than in other years."

"It's a great kick for the artist to hear his song played, but it doesn't fill an empty stomach.

"This country won't benefit from any further curbing of the creative spirit. Today on Broadway there isn't one smash musical hit—I'll go farther—there isn't one smash musical tune, even in the show in which I am playing now (George Whites "Scandals of 1936"), and you must remember that one smash hit can make a whole show."

He cited the tune "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" as responsible for the success of "Roberta," and "Tea for Two" as responsible for the success of "No, No, Nanette."

Discussing the section of the bill which would purportedly allow public performance for profit in the guise of permitting the unrestricted use of music except where admission fees are charged, he outlined the use of music to build business in a cabaret or tavern. He said that by adroit selection of tunes he could make an audience gay, lively and even inspire them to such an extent "by the use of a clarinet in the low register that couples will be warned to leave the floor," and that "hosts will order champagne."

He cited a typical instance of the small return to ASCAP for the use of music which "constitutes the real attraction in a tavern" the case of a spot in New York which grosses more than $400,000 annually and pays ASCAP less than $800. He said the Duffy bill would even remove the $800 return.

Bickering Spoils Show.

The latter portions of his testimony were interrupted repeatedly by hearty bickering among the committee members over matters ranging from whether one orange in a case would spoil the lot to further threats of impeachment of Federal judges by Representative Daly (Democrat), Pennsylvania, and by the insistence of Representative Church (Republican), Illinois, that the hearing was "a show."

Representative O'Malley (Democrat), Wisconsin, repeatedly questioned Vallee closely, and introduced into the record complaints from several small beer parlors in Wisconsin, his home State, that ASCAP had used "hijacking tactics" on them.

Representative Daly said dryly:

"Mr. O'Malley saw 'Roberta,' and the 'smoke' is still in his eyes."

Then Dr. Sirovich made a short speech on the Berne Copyright Convention, which the Duffy bill would have the United States join, referring chiefly to "the fires of bigotry in Germany" and the "dictatorship in Italy" as reasons for the flourishing of piracy of copyrights in those nations.

The hearings will continue today, with what a bitter Congressman privately termed "new guest stars on the menu."

McAdoo Proposes War Debt Board

By the Associated Press.

Creation of another foreign debt commission of nine members with authority to negotiate settlements with America's war debtors was proposed in a resolution introduced yesterday by Senator McAdoo (Democrat), California, Secretary of the Treasury during most of the war borrowing.

The commission, comprising three members each to be appointed by the Vice President, Speaker of the House and the President, would be authorized to meet with representatives of the foreign nations in this city.

Each agreement reached would be subject to Congressional approval. The resolution authorizes an expenditure of $100,000 for expenses.

Parley Slashes Fund for Rural Electrification

Norris Billion-Dollar Bill Cut to $420,000,000 for 10-Year Period.

By the Associated Press.

A conference of Administration aids and Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, yesterday clipped the latter's billion-dollar rural electrification bil more than in half.

The proposed spending under the measure was cut to $420,000,000 over a ten-year period in a conference between Norris and a group which included Chairman Jesse H. Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Morris L. Cooke, rural electrification administrator, and Daniel Bell, acting director of the budget.

Pesident Roosevelt, who did not sit in on the conference, expressed to a press conference his satisfaction with the bill in its revised form. The President is currently engaged in budgetary revision and revenue-raising efforts.

With the agreement in hand, Norris headed back to Capitol Hill, saying he probably would bring the measure up on the Senate floor today. Senate discussion of the measure was dropped temporarily last week to seek an accord between proponents of a billion-dollar program and those who believed the figure excessive.

As revised, the bill would provide $50,000,000 a year for the first two years, the money to come from the reconstruction corporation, thus keeping it directly out of the annual budget. For the remaining eight years, a $40,000,000 annual expenditure would be allowed. The original bill asked $100,000,000 a year for 10 years.

Save for the changed figures, Norris said he foresaw little likelihood of change in the bill in the Senate.

As drafted, the bill would authorize the Rural Electrification Administration to apportion 70 per cent of the annual appropriation among the States in proportion to the number of farms without electricity. Thirty per cent would be apportioned at the discretion of the administrator.

Loans could be made to individual farmers for equipment, to farm groups for generating and distributing systems, and to rural communities of less than 1,500 population. Loans for generating and distributing systems would be repayable out of revenue or otherwise over a 40-year period at 3 per cent interest.

The proposal to obtain the first two year's allotment from the RFC rather than by direct appropriation nettled Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, who for some time has been bombarding any evidence of side-stepping congressional control over appropriations.

"It is a little more of the black magic," he said.

President, Aids Study January Decline in Jobs

Re-employment Prospects in Private Industry Are Canvassed.

Faced with reports indicating a sharp drop in employment in January compared with December, President Roosevelt yesterday discussed the situation with members of the National Emergency Council. Prior to the council meeting, he conferred with Secretaries Roper and Perkins and Maj. George L. Berry, co-ordinator for industrial co-operation.

The President said the discussion concerned general facts in relation to unemployment and the question of whether it was possible for industry to employ more people. He said no conclusions had been reached.

The report of the American Federation of Labor made public Monday estimated total unemployment at 12,626,000 in January, an increase of 1,229,000 over December. The federation reported that the gain in unemployment was the greatest in any January for five years.

The President pointed out that, while employment had dropped, the number employed in January, according to the Labor Department, was greater than in January, 1935. The federation figures bear out this contention, in spite of the drop. Mr. Roosevelt said he had not compared the Labor Department figures with those of the union organization.

The President said that he expected to send his estimates of relief needs to Congress between March 10 and March 19. He said that thus far no money had been transferred from other relief agencies to the Works Progress Administration, but he added that the latter is scraping the barrel and that one of the problems that must be solved is finding money to carry the Hopkins organization through May and June, when new appropriations, presumably, will become available.

Mr. Roosevelt gave no indication of how much relief money would likely be asked. In his budget message last January he said "I do not anticipate the need for additional relief funds" will be as great as $2,136,000,000.

Failure of employment to gain, in spite of reviewing business, may make necessary a larger appropriation than originally anticipated. In any case, it is expected that the bulk of the new appropriation, if not all of it, will be asked for the Works Progress Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps, which is also approaching the end of its resources.

Meanwhile, announcement was made by Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator, that WPA would start this month to trim its rolls from a February high of 3,037,440 to a minimum of 2,310,100 by next June 30.

The administration anticipated, Hopkins asserted, that 200,000 persons would be placed in private or other employment each two weeks between now and July 1.

Hopkins' formal announcement stated that increased employment opportunities afforded by the Public Works Administration, Federal and local road-building programs, and in agriculture and seasonal occupations, which normally increase their working forces throughout the spring, were depended upon to absorb many of those now engaged on WPA projects.

Note For Red Baiters.

The Soviet Union is slipping into a position of "status quo," and beginning to experience all the incidental embarrassments. For nearly 20 years the world has accepted, with gradually diminishing shudders, its self-portrait of a robust revolutionary government. But now the tactics of the terrorist are being diluted by luncheon club ideology, much to the dismay of those Communist sympathizers who exalt the rougher proletarian traits.

The "Stakhanoff" workers, those industrial shock troopers whose Marxian enthusiasm was to raise Communist industrial production to the level of that of capitalist countries, are the latest victims of the trend. It is reported that they can no longer imitate the husky rivet-drivers of Soviet art at full efficiency because they have become the social lions of the classless society. Theatrical engagements and lectures have become their avocation. The change, from the romantic point of view, is deplorable. A muscular figure with a sledge hammer or sickle may be a fit successor to the bearded Bolshevik, but he will never be adequate inspiration if the hammer and sickle give way to tea cup and lecture manuscript.

It would be hard to estimate the number of irritable intellectuals who have adopted Communism from impatience with after-dinner speeches, much as Tom Sawyer sat in the schoolroom and dreamed of piracy. A Bolshevik with a bomb is a satisfactorily psychological substitute for a pirate, and is more fashionable in this sociological era. But if it becomes apparent that the alternative to our present brand of bourgeois ballyhoo is merely a less entertaining proletarian variety, and that the class warrior will be expected to recount his exploits to women's clubs, the Comintern organizers are going to meet with considerably more sales resistance.

Equal Rights For Panama.

Relations between the United States and Panama will undergo significant changes as soon as the new treaty agreements announced by the State Department have been ratified. The little Central American republic will step out of the role of stepchild into that of an equal partner with the United States in the handling of problems of primary interest to both countries. And while the development is naturally of special importance to Panama, its constructive influence will also be felt throughout the Western Hemisphere.

The United States has not yielded any rights essential to the maintenance and protection of the Panama Canal. Apparently this Government has retained the prerogative of taking measures considered necessary to safeguard the interoceanic waterway. But essential steps of this sort will be based upon voluntary co-operation between the two States. Under the new understanding Panama recognizes that protection of the canal is vital to her own interests as well as to those of the United States. The significant change is one of method and attitude rather than of objectives. Henceforth, American rights in Panama will carry no intimation of any encroachment upon that country's untrammeled sovereignty.

Through the new agreements numerous causes of friction in Panama should be removed. And the "good neighbor" policy which the Roosevelt Administration has consistently developed in its dealings with Latin America will be carried another step forward. The domination of Panama by Washington has been a source of criticism in Latin America ever since the first Roosevelt threw his influence on the side of the Panaman revolutionaries and thus gained acquiescence in the canal project. Elimination of this criticism is an important preliminary to a successful program at the forthcoming inter-American peace conference. Nor will the effect of the action be lessened by recognition of our moral obligation to pay the canal rentals in the equivalent of undervalued dollars.

If the revised treaty with Panama were a single instance of the co-operative policy followed by the Administration in respect to Latin America, our southern neighbors might not be fully convinced that imperialism in the Caribbean is at an end. But this new evidence of good will follows the abrogation of the Platt amendment in Cuba, the withdrawal of the Marines from Haiti and Nicaragua, the Pan-American treaty renouncing the right of intervention and Mr. Roosevelt's recent call for an inter-American peace conference.

These steps constitute impressive leadership in the development of mutual understanding among the nations of the new world. Negotiations for the establishment of more effective peace machinery among the countries of the Western Hemisphere should now go forward in an atmosphere of full confidence and good will.

Heil Blanton!

Representative Blanton's sub-committee has cracked down upon the District with a bitterness that is seldom manifested, and is even less frequently tolerated, in legislative circles. His report to the House, along with several indefensible cuts in the 1937 budget estimates, clearly betrays his personal animus. The whole performance leads inevitably to the conclusion that the gentleman from Abilene is trying to fine the District $3,000,000 for daring to challenge his dictatorship over local affairs.

Theoretically, of course, the appropriation bill sent to the House is the work of a sub-committee. Yet it clearly bears the stamp of Blantonism. Apparently other members of the sub-committee acquiesced in the desires of the pugnacious Texan to show the District where to get off. The result is a farcical climax to Washington's demands for treatment as a civilized community.

The flowering of Mr. Blanton's prejudices is especially noticeable in the provision forbidding the employment of doctors on a part-time basis. Because of the low salaries paid in the Health Department this is a serious blow to the cause of controlling disease and reducing Washington's disgraceful death rate. Experienced and capable doctors will not be able to serve the District for $2,400 or less per year, if they are forbidden to practice on the side. There is no excuse for the injection of this provision into the bill, except to penalize some of the public servants who incurred Mr. Blanton's ire by advocating more adequate health funds.

No doubt the Health Department budget was slashed for the same reason. The outrageous neglect of public health in Washington has been fully exposed by the courageous efforts of the District Medical Society. Mr. Blanton seems to consider that community service as a personal affront to himself. Being unable to refute the findings of the medical profession he offered to fight any doctor at the recent mass meeting. Since the doctors retained their dignity, the cost of appeasing Mr. Blanton's ruffled feelings are provisionally assessed against the victims of preventable but uncontrolled disease.

With unusual deference to logic the sub-committee report attempts to explain the slash of $3,000,000 in the Federal contribution to the local budget by listing the advantages of local taxpayers. That list is impressive, but elementary fairness dictates that it be matched by enumeration of the services and benefits which this community bestows upon the Federal Government. The sub-committee is fully aware of the fact that no system for measuring the Government's obligation to this municipality has been worked out. And in the absence of such a formula it is beside the point to talk of District residents being undertaxed.

As a matter of fact, the local schools have been denied adequate funds, public health has been cruelly neglected, utility regulation is being slowly strangled and police protection is jeopardized to build up surpluses in the District budget which can be used to relieve Congress of its responsibility to finance the national functions of the Capital City. Only prejudice could attempt to defend that procedure by trying to compare local tax rates with incomparable levies of other cities.

The District never had any reason to expect fair treatment from Blanton's sub-committee. But it does expect such treatment from Congress. The primary concern is not the $3,000,000 slashed from the Federal contribution, important as that certainly is. The real issue is whether a single embittered demagogue shall be permitted to play the role of Hitler at the expense of Washingtonians. On that score Congress should be even more eager than the disfranchised residents of Washington to strip the District appropriation bill of Blantonism.

"Walk" Lights.

There is an ironic touch in the announcement that "walk" lights are soon to be tried out in Washington. Experimental installation awaits only the approval of the Fine Arts Commission. Walking in Washington having of necessity developed into a fine art, this approval is appropriately solicited.

The introduction of "walk" lights may prove a real thrust at a fundamental of Washington's traffic problem. Statistics show that pedestrians are a considerable factor in the high rate of accidents and fatalities plaguing the city. Last year the police recorded 9,627 traffic accidents; of which 2,408, or approximately 25 per cent, involved pedestrians. Analysis of the fatality totals for 1935 reveals that of the 113 killed on Washington highways, 74, or 65 per cent, were pedestrians. So Traffic Director Van Duzer is not acting prematurely in concentrating on the problems of the forgotten pedestrian.

After a careful study of methods used by other cities, he is persuaded that regulation of foot traffic is as important as control of vehicular traffic in promoting general safety. "Walk" lights will be particularly desirable if they solve the problem of the right-hand turn—the pedestrian's greatest annoyance. But the success of this, as any other mechanical safeguard, obviously will depend on the co-operation of the public. Lacking co-operation, the alternative will be to push forward the proposed regulation forbidding the crossing of streets except at corners, and then only in accordance with the signals of police officers or traffic lights.

A Chance For Peace.

The psychological moment for the opening of peace negotiations in the Italo-Ethiopian war, now entering the sixth month of hostilities, has clearly arrived. On the one hand, the recent series of Italian victories enables Mussolini to discuss a settlement while his domestic prestige is high. On the other hand, Italy's rapidly increasing economic and financial problems dictate a cessation of hostilities at the earliest possible moment. Furthermore, the approach of the "little rains," which will greatly impede military operations and permit Ethiopia time to recuperate from recent blows, counsels the Italians to seek a compromise settlement.

Nobody knows better than Mussolini that five months of strenuous warfare have actually gained relatively little for Italy. By concentration of huge armies, and lavish expenditures of their slim national resources, the Italians have smashed their way into Ethiopia from the north, the east and the south. But unless the morale of the defenders has completely crumbled under the rain of bombs and shells, the problems of Marshal Badoglio are only just beginning. He is still a very long way from Addis Ababa and a dictated peace.

At this juncture the sanctionist powers are acting wisely in coupling a "pressing appeal" for peace with active preparations for extending present embargoes against Italy to include oil shipments. Regardless of what has been said for domestic consumption, the Fascist rulers know very well that the pinch is growing acute. Signs such as yesterday's decline in Italian bonds multiply. And while an emotionally stimulated populace may be prepared for further sacrifices at command, the dubious value of empty victories which lead progressively toward complete national bankruptcy is becoming steadily more clear.

For its practical effect, as well as for the moral obligation involved, the League members are therefore well advised to press on with the policy of sanctions. Even without the support of President Roosevelt's statement on Saturday, renewing his appeal against American shipments of basic munitions to belligerents, Geneva should now properly proceed to the application of sanctions on oil. They would furnish a very practical leverage for a speedy peace, and such a peace not merely Europe but the whole world needs acutely.

The forces of recovery are now everywhere seeking to become operative. It is the constant threat of war which more than any other general factor is retarding their beneficent work. As long as the Ethiopian campaign continues, the threat of wider hostilities will be not merely present but constantly aggravated. If Mussolini cannot see for himself that international welfare urges him to a negotiated peace, he must be helped to understand that fact by outside pressure.

Spring Fever And Flora.

Best-sellers may come and best-sellers may go, but there is one type of spring literature that goes on forever. Its authors are unsung, it makes no pretensions to classicism, and its plots never deviate. But it is always thrilling, optimistic, and never insipid, even with the invariable happy ending. Romanticism reached its crest in "Anthony Adverse;" realism is waiting in the wings for its cue of "Wolfe, Wolfe;" and adventure is taking soundings for another Mutiny on another Bounty. But the seed catalogue we have with us always.

It takes no publishers' blurbs or literary teas to insure the popularity of this floral fiction. As modern as O'Hara and much more exciting than a mere Halliburton, it could rightly be called the great American epic of spring. Scarcely less economical of words than Dreiser, still it contains many more beginnings for potential American tragedies. This in the event that your lawn does not turn out to be a "rolling mass of velvet" and your snapdragons fail to materialize into the "tallest growing, largest flowering" as per page 124!

Now is the time for all good gardeners to start on their homework. And if there be skeptics who think it's a simple matter of planting and waiting, let them stick to ping-pong and Monopoly. For the problem is not so simple—there's a time to spade and a time to forego; there's a flower that's "hardy" and another that's only "half-hardy." So many technicalities have crept into the pastime of gardening that the little "All-American Seed Selections" are as hard to judge each year as the bathing beauties in Atlantic City.

But the catalogue which interests us most is the one containing a "complete pronouncing guide of plant subjects." For there is one thing that has been bothering us lately. How could we brag to the neighbors about our superb nyctaginiflora when we couldn't even pronounce the blamed thing?

Back to First Order.

From the Buffalo Evening News.

The government which Manuel Azana has succeeded in forming in Spain may be expected to bring the second republic back to its original course.

The recent election in Spain also is of importance internationally. The Rightists have during recent months become more and more critical of the League of Nations and were opposed to Spain's participation in any program of sanctions against Italy. The parties now in power, however, favor complete and wholehearted co-operation with the League, as was laid down in the 1931 constitution.

Paths For Rock Creek.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The subject of this letter is the lack of walking facilities in Rock Creek Park, especially at the entrances to the park, and the object of it is to ask if you will see that this plea gets into the hands of someone who may be able to do something about it.

I wonder how many people have ever given a thought to the danger that pedestrians encounter when attempting to walk into Rock Creek Park? Was this park so planned that only motorist and horseback riders were to have the use of it? I know of no entrance to the park that properly and safely provides for the person walking into it. Even in the park there is little provision made for the walkers. Walking in the park usually involves a choice of risks: (1) Being knocked down by an automobile; (2) Being run over by a horse. Neither of these risks is at all conducive to the peace of mind of the walker or to his recreation.

What about PWA money being spent for footpaths throughout the park, following the creek, and also at the entrances? Conditions such as the above-described are what stir bolshevistic sentiments in the minds of a people. Give them proper facilities for walking such sentiments off and at least they will feel less inclined to throw stones at motorists and riders when they (the people of Washington) walk into the park to seek a little peace and quiet from the turmoil of the city. To Gallingerize Columbia.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The bulk of opinion expressed on the needs of Gallinger Hospital, and which embraces the taking over by Gallinger of Columbia Hospital, is noticeably wanting in consideration of Columbia's side of the question.

Columbia Hospital is the oldest woman's hospital in the country. It has a reputation for thoroughness, high-class work under refined influences, an esprit d'corps among its nurses, a class of refind patients and other qualities which go to make "atmosphere." These things call for consideration when there is talk of merging it with any institution which would entirely change Columbia's standing.

The hospital's nurses should be considered. This organization of some of the best known and qualified nurses in the city would be thrown upon hospitals from which they did not graduate, and which have all they can do to take care of their own graduates. The high-class and influential patrons of Columbia would be deprived of an institution which they and their friends have long considered fitted to their requirements.

To Gallingerize Columbia Hospital would strike a blow at hospital prestige, and do great injustice to a force in the medical world that has been built up since 1866 to where it has just pride in its standing. As one who knows Columbia Hospital, but who has nothing whatever of personal objective in mind, I ask that Columbia's side of this suggested combination be given.

A Southerner Protests.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago there seemed to be an implication by a writer in your letter columns that Virginia justice was strangely indifferent to the crimes of the white race, but was never reluctant to enforce any and all the laws against a racial minority. As a Southerner of long residence in the South, it has been my observation that it has been the practice of officers of the law and the courts to go out of their way to convict Negro citizens of all manner of crimes that they may or may not have committed.

According to a recent press release from Alexandria, a white man, 76 years of age, was convicted on a moral charge by the testimony of seven minor girls and he was sentenced to serve 12 months in jail. The same release reports that three colored men were sentenced to serve 18 months each in the State penitentiary for the theft of automobile tires.

Like a well-known Southern poet, I can read of such injustices and say, truthfully say:

But, O! deep in my heart I pity these Poor human blunderers who have tonight
Made me, God knows, ashamed of being white!

The glaring miscarriage of justice becomes worse as we realize this is not an isolated case of racial prejudice, but the accepted method of meting out justice in the South. Protection of Southern womanhood is not an issue in this case, as proven by the shorter sentence given the person guilty of a moral crime, and the uncalled-for sentence given three Negro men, who probably stole tires to sell for money to get food in order to keep alive to look for work.

Recovery Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Greatest prosperity comes with maximum production. Production now held down by under-consumption, which, in turn, is due to the fact that the country's work is done by only four-fifths of the available workers, who satisfy their wants and deposit money in the bank (proved by bank deposits) while the other one-fifth do not have work or buying power.

Would it not be better to concentrate on remedying the cause of our economic troubles by making and keeping a healthy demand for workers in industry rather than trying so many alphabetical correctives?

This could be done by subsidizing, for a limited period of time, the companies who will shorten working hours and "break in" an extra shift of workers, starting with those industries that work 24 hours a day. This, if carried far enough, would solve the agricultural problem by giving farmers a chance to work in industry and a natural balance between the city and farm workers would be re-established.

Will Death Take A Holiday?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The District of Columbia has a tax rate as high as that of comparable cities. Some of the money paid in by the taxpayers will be paid out to meet the expenditures of the District, but large amounts of it will accumulate as a surplus in the Treasury vaults—possibly $3,000,000 by the end of next fiscal year.

The District of Columbia has one of the highest death rates in the entire United States. Its Health Department is undermanned and inadequately equipped. Its understaffed hospitals are overcrowded. Disease is rampant. Death stalks abroad. Hearses go daily from our homes and our hospitals bearing the dead to the cemeteries.

Will death take a holiday in the District of Columbia? Not so long as Congress turns deaf ears to our pleadings and withholds from our Health Department, from our hospitals and from our doctors and nurses the funds (our funds) they so sorely need to fight the grim reaper. ALBA M. EDWARDS.

"Wipe The Slate Clean."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To shame and dishonor Army or Navy officers of the type of Gens. Mitchell, Butler, Johnson and Hagood is not only intolerable and despicable, but smacks of the Dark Ages.

Must it be that martyrs have to be made of men of such brilliant minds to achieve such very small improvements?

Would we now have to worry about armaments or ships had Gen. Mitchell's advice been taken? Let's broaden out and wipe the slate clean or at least try to be men of the nineteenth century.

In Behalf Of Father Coughlin.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is surprising to find such a number of admirers of the Catholic Church, who declare in their correspondence a great admiration for it, when they are making an attack on Father Coughlin. As I remember, most of the letter writers to the editor of The Post begin or close with that declaration.

If they admire so much the Catholic Church, why don't they admire a man who, fearlessly, alone, against thousands of bankers and unscrupulous public servers, expounds, Sunday after Sunday the philosophy and ethics of a church; which philosophy, though not a dogmatic point, certainly belongs to Christian principles, overlooked and barred from public life in most of the countries in the world.

Don't get overanxious about the time Coughlin wastes in preparing his speeches and neglecting his Sunday Mass sermons; please don't cry for the money he spends in his trips to Washington.

Do you for one moment think there is no corruption, immorality and bribery in politics? Are you sure that the bankers do not abuse their power and "use the funds of the bank to speculate in the breadstuffs of the country," as the great Jackson put it? Do you really believe that it is not a moral issue to protect millions of people who lose their homes in foreclosures and no big politician seems to raise his voice against such infamy? Don't you see that in his speeches, though no dogmatic teaching of the Catholic Church, there is in them Christian thought, Christian justice?

And, once for all, everybody knows by now that he talks as a citizen of a democratic country. It is the duty of every citizen to contribute his ideas to make a clean, progressive democracy. Can you imagine the good that his public utterances has effected and how many are rather afraid of being caught in some political trick, for fear of having his Sunday afternoon radio hour?

You don't expect anyone in service to the public to use candied words to address these gentlemen who, in the halls of the Congress, use their fists, insults, cloak-room politics and ungentlemanly remarks under congressional immunity.

He (Coughlin) is doing a great service to democracy. Bankers, industrialists, veterans, organized rich farmers have their strong lobbies in Washington but America has not a national lobby serving national interests, national ideals, national justice in Congress.

I believe there should be at least a dozen of Coughlins, plain, outspoken citizens, alert to the national welfare, with a view to national legislation—against class lobby, class pressure and class gang in newspapers and radio, to weigh every issue on principles of common good of the country, against the excessive patronage and favor for partisan districts and powerful particular interests. Congress was instituted for that purpose; this sacred institution should be the national lobby. But the history of elections and the performances in the Capitol, convincingly prove that they belong to political cliques.

National Union for Social Justice stands for a national lobby.

Thank God we have such a man. He stands like a few apostles of old, who stood with Christ when he was scourged, criticized and even spat upon but who nevertheless conquered in the end. That is my faith which I share with millions of others. M. L. C.

The Post Impressionist

G-Men, M. I. And the S. S.

Post Office, Wednesday.

WHEN we come to think of it, the Doughton bill to put the Treasury Department's five law-enforcement units under the Secret Service is hardly a new thing. It is just a new twist to an old one. In 1922 there was a movement to gather all such units of all departments into one group.

Only, that time their boss was to be the illustrious detective, W. J. Burns, predecessor of J. Edgar Hoover. Not the Treasury's Secret Service, but the Department of Justice and what are now the "G-Men" were to swallow the rest.

* * *

The reason was that the Justice agents had done a better job with their share of guarding the delegates to the Washington Armament Conference than the Secret Service lads had done with their share. We don't say the assertion was correct: we merely say that it was made.

The Post-Impressionist is most careful about this, for he is in danger of being called prejudiced. He was a primitive G-Man.

* * *

Since no end of European Big Guns were attending that conference, a lot of little guns were needed to protect them. This task was divided among the Military Intelligence, State Department agents, the Treasury's Secret Service and the corresponding section of the Department of Justice. The last-named force, however, hadn't enough men available: it called for volunteers.

* * *

It certainly got a mixed crew. The great-grandson of America's biggest railroad-fortune, the son of a former Congressman whose Senator-father had made the Schley-Sampson controversy, the destined Post-Impressionist; as mixed as that. Nevertheless, there was a firm basis of some 30 "regulars;" they soon broke in the rest of us.

And how the State Department agents, the M. I. (the Military Intelligence) and the Treasury men (hereinafter called simply "The Secret Service") scorned us!

And how we hated them!

* * *

That's why we remember these anecdotes.

* * *

One of the Military Intelligence had guarded a prominent French delegate into a department store, lost him there and hadn't found him again for four hours.

"That's all very well," said the delegate to his secretary, well within our earshot; "but why call the thing an Intelligence?"

* * *

The row between North and South China was pretty hot just then; one Chinese delegate had been attacked; all guards should have known that Dr. Wellington Koo, then Minister to London and delegate to this conference, was particularly anxious to avoid attention. At the height of the Battle of Arlington—which is to say the unpoliced burial of America's Unknown Soldier—we were riding in the car of Dr. and Mrs. Koo, when a modest person wearing a shepherd's plaid suit, a tweed hat and a green tie, held us up.

"Who've you got there?" he yelled for all the crowd to hear . . . "Huh? I belong to the real Secret Service and got a right to know . . . Won't tell? I'll put you under arrest if you don't!"

We held our tongue and kept our liberty. But Dr. Koo must have wondered where that Secret Service man learned his definition of secrecy.

* * *

That chaos at Arlington, and for ten miles around, is something we hark back to whenever we hear today's motorists complain of Washington traffic management. During the World War, we had seen some nasty congestion in France—as when five American divisions were poured into roads which, the French had warned the commanding officers, would bear, at most, two divisions. Such scenes were mere fire-drills in comparison. One unhappy Secret Service "operative"—supposed, like the rest of us, to keep hidden the identity of "his man"—wriggled through the tangle of automobiles, shrieking an ingenuous invitation to ambitious annoyers:

"Gimme gangway! I got the French Premier here!"

* * *

He ended by mislaying M. Briand, somewhere about 10:30 a. m. Their next meeting was at breakfast on the following morning.

* * *

The Department of State agents did their best for Chief Justice Hughes, who was at that time Secretary of State, but he had to leave his car long before it reached the cemetery. He accomplished the rest of his journey afoot.

Although he later succumbed to the offer of a fortunate Ford, he reached the ceremonies unguarded, and thereafter he gave up guarded vehicular locomotion for the duration of the conference. His custom was to walk to its sessions at a perilous pace, a not very well rolled umbrella used as a cane, the perspiring operatives operating far in his wake . . .

* * *

A bit after the conclusion of the conference, there came that demand to lump all the secret services into One Big Union.

But wiser heads concluded that competion was the life of both guardianship and espionage.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Cermak and Capek.

Praha, Czechoslovakia, March 3.

MINE host at the moment is a fat Bohemian with bristles on his neck and scalp and a voice like a strawberry crate being knocked to pieces with an ax. His name is Sroubek, and he was a boyhood friend of the late Tony Cermak, Bohemian youth who went to Chicago as a handkerchief emigrant, became mayor of the second city of the Promised Land and returned to the old country to invite the adulation of the home folks and, incidentally, to undertake a little business along with his sentimental errand. Mr. Cermak was a man of vision who foresaw repeal of prohibition, and it was his idea to make a deal for the Chicago agency of Pilsner beer.

Then, as we all know, Mr. Cermak went down to Florida in the winter of 1932 on another dual mission. He took himself to Miami to meditate on the sufferings of his unemployed amid the drifts and wintery gales on the southern shores of Lake Michigan and, incidentally, to buttonhole Franklin D. Roosevelt, President-elect, to ask him what about those jobs for the deserving Democrats of Illinois.

Then a sad mishap occurred. An insane Italian bricklayer, suffering from pains in his middle, somehow blamed Mr. Roosevelt and began popping away at him with a pistol just at the moment when Tony Cermak was drawing alongside, beginning to ask Frank what about those jobs. So they laid poor Tony in his grave, and the Bohemian greenhorn was given a funeral which up to now ranks fourth in American history in the matter of noise, publicity and maudlin sentimentalism.

Abraham Lincoln, Warren Harding and Rudolph Valentino outrank him in this respect, and it is of interest to note that two of the loudest American funerals were awarded to boys who were emigrants from the Old World.

• • • •

TO this day an autographed photograph of Mr. Cermak hangs on the turn of the grand staircase of Grand Hotel Sroubek, conducted by his boyhood friend, and a diminutive pennant of the University of Chicago is draped across the lower edge of the frame.

The Czechoslovaks are much more proud of old Thomas Masaryk, who gave them a country and only recently retired from the Presidency, to which he was called by acclamation at the Versailles Conference.

Old Man Masaryk was born the son of an Austrian serf—a coachman for a noble family who remained a serf to the day of his death—and a woman who was born in an aristocratic household.

He began nagging at books very early in his life, and once when he was a little boy he fell in with a regiment of Austrians who were running away from the Prussians and saved the life of an Austrian colonel who had been slashed over the head. The old man turned out to be a great scholar, philosopher, fighter, patriot and statesman, and the Czechs give him credit that they are today, in a manner of speaking, a free and independent country.

• • • •

PERHAPS if Tony Cermack had happened along about twenty years earlier they would have thought more of him, but, you may understand, he accepted a heavy handicap when he invited comparison between his own achievements and those of Thomas Masaryk. The comparison is particularly hard at the present moment, for one of the most popular books in the book stores which abound in Praha is a curious biography of the old man written by a local journalist named Karel Capek (pronounced Chapek), who wrote a couple of very good plays in the few years just after the war.

One of the shows was known as "R. U. R.," or "Rossom's Universal Robots." The other as "The World We Live In," more familiarly called the Insect Play. Mr. Capek's Insect Play was a strange story in which all the actors impersonated beetles, gnats, butterflies and two tribes of warrior ants—the reds and the blacks. It was not a very good play for the actors, for in their dehumanized form on the stage they had no opportunity to strut their handsome profiles or wave their hands in graceful gestures, but it was one of the greatest dramas of our age and time, for it wound up in a world war between the red and the black ants over a dispute about the pathway between two blades of grass.

• • • •

MR. CAPEK tells me he will never write another play, because the playwright's work is subject to too much interference and assistance from the producer and all such people. If a man writes a book it goes as it lies, but a play, whether for the stage or for the movies, is never wholly his own by the time the customers see it.

It was strange to hear the man who wrote the Insect Play insist that there was no immediate danger of war in this part of the world, considering Czechoslovakia sticks into the Germans' country like a pistol jabbed deep into their ribs.

With hostile Poles on the north and a seditious German minority constantly poisoning the country under Hitler's instructions and pay, it seems positively dangerous to be a Czech today. But Capek reminded me of their anti-aircraft batteries on the hills outside the town and the strength of Russia and France and the Little Entente, forgetting, apparently, that his country lies in the pathway between two blades of grass.

The Landon Strategy

Refusal To Enter Ohio And Tactful Overtures To Iowa Republicans Augur Well For Kansan's Chances As A Popular Nominee.

By Hilding Siversen.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Kansas City, March 3.

THE refusal of Gov. Landon of Kansas to enter the Ohio Presidenial primaries, which might have started a fight with Borah, and the appearance of an unofficial observer at the Iowa Republican State Convention, were two simultaneous events which have demonstrated wisdom on the part of Landon and his friends. The general strategy of the Landon campaign is to avoid antagonisms within the party. His supporters are content to let well enough alone, believing that their candidate is showing such basic strength that an aggressive campaign at this time would tend to defeat its own ends, and that the best results can be attained by a policy of intraparty benevolence.

His supporters also make another argument which seems fairly well loaded with logic. It is something like this:

One of the best things that could possibly happen to the United States of America in these politically turbulent times would be to see an actual working out of the rare phenomenon of the office seeking the man. Landon is showing no false modesty or over-coyness. His Kansas Day and Lincoln, Nebr., speeches evidenced plenty of fight. But he has proceeded on the theory that if the people want him for a candidate it would not be wise for him to take aggressive steps toward rounding up State delegations. Far better to let the spontaneous demand develop strength from the very grassroots. His strength today is wholly spontaneous. His supporters know exactly what they want.

In very few recent campaigns has this been the case. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Herbert Hoover both went after delegates aggressively in their respective pre-convention campaigns, and made no bones of it. The Roosevelt technique was especially pronounced, for a line of demarcation was drawn between Democrats who were for Roosevelt before the convention and those who swung into line afterward, with various punitive features and rewards to make the distinction more readily grasped. There is no sin in asking for votes. But in view of the recent spectacles of the rounding-up process, it would be refreshing and unusual indeed if a formidable candidate should be developed solely from a definite popular demand, and without a trace of manufactured sentiment.

THE actual existence of this popular demand, shown in the Nation-wide poll of Republicans by the Institute of Public Opinion and various other polls in which Landon is given a substantial plurality, is one of the most impressive preconvention indices that could be imagined, and is a headache to a practical politician like President Roosevelt. With such evidences, which include a handsome testimonial from Ohio, Landon can well afford to stay out of the Ohio primaries, even if he should lose the delegation from that State on the early ballots. Further indication of the ground swell in his favor comes this week, with formal indorsement of the Kansas Governor by the New Mexico Republican State convention.

To Iowa came Clyde Miller, unofficial representative of Landon, during the State convention, Friday, February 28. Substantially he said this: "We know that Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, is a receptive candidate, therefore we would not be surprised if Iowa's delegates should cast their first vote for Dickinson, and as long as they think Dickinson has a chance. We should like to have Iowa go for Landon if Dickinson cannot be nominated. Vice versa, we may be able to help Dickinson if Landon can't be nominated."

Presumably the same formula is used as to favorite sons in other States. In other words, the Landon strategy is to leave the field as free and open as possible, without trying to move in on favorite sons, and let nature take its course. Besides being very good politics, this strategy is also very much a part of genuine democracy and good, clean government.

When Clyde Miller had finished his visit at the Iowa State convention he was feeling very well pleased indeed, for his room at one of the local hotels had been the scene of a constant procession of county delegates who came to express their good will. A few of them were for Borah, a few were for Knox and a few were for Dickinson, but practically all were for Landon, either as first or second choice.

ALMOST coincident with these two events was the convention of the National Education Association at St. Louis, where again was sprung the familiar story that Landon had closed schools in Kansas and had brought deterioration to the school system. This story has been industriously circulated by the New Deal agents, and was taken up by a speaker at this convention. Landon made no comment, but it had been previously made plain from Topeka that no school children had been deprived of educational privileges by any act of Gov. Landon's, or of anyone else, for that matter.

In the first place, the Governor, as everybody knows who takes the trouble to think a moment, has nothing to do with local school administration, and public schools are definitely governed by local bodies. The reason for this trumped-up issue lies in the fact that because of a general policy developed by the entire State government, some schools were consolidated, thus eliminating a part of the expense, though in no case were children deprived of instruction. Teachers' salaries in many cases were reduced, as they have been practically everywhere in the United States, but not so drastically as the salaries of Kansas State officials.

Postmaster General Farley, in his recent Topeka speech, wept gently on the shoulder of Kansas, in behalf of her teachers, but he was exceedingly cautious and general in his lamentation—so general that his statement called for no rebuttal.

• • • •

THE fact that the New Deal big guns are centering their fire on Landon, and are very cordial toward Borah's candidacy, is not without significance. The Roosevelt strategists, this early in the campaign, have a fairly accurate idea of the type of man who could make the most trouble for Roosevelt in November, and they would be glad to help the Republicans choose somebody who would be easy to beat.

Their tenderest spot has to do with the gigantic and unprecedented public debt and the fact that two dollars are rolling out of the public treasury for every dollar coming in. The fact is gradually emerging that the public expenditures and debt problems are now so formidable that they have gotten beyond the control of the New Dealers. Even though they might, at this psychological moment in the campaign, wish to curb the orgy of extravagance, they just don't know how to do it.

This state of affairs, of course, accounts for the fact that administration politicos are exceedingly anxious to head off the candidacy of a man who has demonstrated by performance that he actually knows how to curb extravagance. And so they accuse him of pinching the school teachers, which doesn't happen to be within a Governor's or President's power.

• • • •

IF the present course of the Landon candidacy is kept up without serious mistakes, it will continue to grow. Thus far no errors worth mentioning have been made. The Landon-for-President organization is loose and informal, with two or three men giving their own time to keep up with correspondence. Landon has the advice of some able and experienced politicians. It is also well known that he is making his own final decisions, and for that reason hasn't become involved in tangles. He knows his way around and is riding his own horse of destiny, wherever it may take him.

Cutten Indictment Sought in Tax Case

Chicago, March 3 (A.P.).—United States District Attorney Michael Igoe said tonight a Federal grand jury would be asked to indict Arthur W. Cutten, famed grain trader, on charges of income tax evasion.

United States Treasury Department agents probably will start presenting evidence to the grand jury tomorrow, Igoe asserted.

The Federal prosecutor said he did not know the amount of tax Cutten is alleged to have failed to pay, or the circumstances of the case.

He declared, however, that the case had no connection with the Government's efforts to bar Cutten from the grain pits for alleged violation of Federal grain trading regulations.

The sub-committee expects to complete its preliminary studies in the next two days, so hearings can begin by the middle of next week.

The tax sub-committee consists of Chairman Hill, Representatives Thomas H. Cullen, of New York; Fred M. Vinson, of Kentucky, and Jere Cooper, of Tennessee (all Democrats), and Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts; Frank Crowther, of New York, and Roy O. Woodruff, of Michigan (Republicans).

Hardly were the contents of the President's message known than the House, lackadaisically debating the District appropriations bill, plunged into an argument on the new tax proposals, with Republicans directing their criticism of the proposed graduated tax on undistributed corporate earnings.

Urges Deeper Cuts.

Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, supplied the spark by suggesting that "the pruning knife be substituted for the scoop and shovel" and proposing a "pay-as-you-go" policy in Government.

Chairman John J. O'Connor of the House Rules Committee bore the brunt of the Administration's defensive, asserting that the corporation surplus tax was "nothing new," that he had repeatedly introduced bills providing for the same principle. O'Connor, as did the President later, insisted that corporations would be allowed to maintain "reasonable reserves," but declined to say how they might be defined.

Minority Leader Bertrand H. Snell swung into the debate with a query as to how business, under such a tax system, might be expected to lay aside funds for "a rainy day."

"I maintain," argued Snell, "that one of the best assets the Government has had during these last four years has been these surplus reserves built up by carefully managed concerns and used during the depression to employ those who otherwise would have been jobless."

Republican members of the Michigan delegation also sprang to the attack, led by Representative Jesse P. Wolcott, who cited the automobile industry centered in Michigan as a pioneer in leading the Nation back from the depression. He said the industry was able to do so largely through carefully built-up surpluses.

"What would have happened to the General Motors Corporation and to the Ford Motor Co. during the depression if they had not built up substantial reserves?" asked Wolcott. "They weren't able to go on building cars and expanding operations on current earnings. They depended on their reserves. • • • This Nation has become what it is through investments made with the expectation of a fair return."

Warns of Danger.

Off the floor, Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, characterized the undistributed corporate earnings tax as "exceedingly dangerous."

"What would have happened in the past five years to big corporations who made no money and yet paid their dividends out of surplus and kept their investors from the poorhouse?" he asked.

At least one Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee, Representative Chester Thompson, of Illinois, took a similar view.

"I am not for the suggestions mentioned in this message," said Thompson. "A bill drafted along such lines would have a very adverse effect upon business. We have been depending upon industry to start absorbing the unemployed in the very near future. The message is hard to reconcile with the so-called 'breathing spell' announcement."

Representative Isaac Bacharach, of New Jersey, a Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee, called the plan "a drastic proposition for business to swallow at this time" and suggested: "I don't think the bill will look like the message."

Criticism Voiced.

On the other side of the Capitol, Senator L. J. Dickinson (Republican), Iowa, promptly branded the message "another soak the rich scheme."

"This means that the corporations can't save a dime," he said. "That's what I'd call really sharing the wealth."

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, observed crisply:

"Having killed all other forms of thrift it is entirely logical that all evidences of it should be taxed out of existence."

Vandenberg said the President appeared to be interested "solely in tax schemes, the necessity for which he can blame somebody else."

Senator William H. King, of Utah, conservative Democratic member of the Senate Finance Committee, said he will oppose "any reform in corporation taxes."

Majority leaders on both sides of the Capitol, however, chorused that the message was clear, that his suggestions required "study" and that it was the duty of Congress to balance the ordinary budget.

Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee said the President's proposal to tax undivided corporate earnings would eliminate double taxation and still bring in more revenue than the present law.

"Of course," Harrison added, "careful consideration will have to be given, if this suggestion is adopted, to propositions allowing the building up of reserves in special cases and allowing for the set-off of a prior year's loss against a current year's profit."

Growing belief that the tax controversy will be a prolonged one that might substantially delay adjournment, was indicated by Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson, who admitted the message "brings forward the most difficult issue of this session," and added that "this is the only matter which might prolong the session."

Expressing a hope that both the Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees will act promptly, he continued:

"Revenues from existing taxes are rapidly increasing, and therefore levies which may be made pursuant to the message will be of comparatively short duration."

Speaker Byrns remarked that the task ahead of Congress was clear, adding that "it is evidently the proposal of the President to balance the budget for the ordinary current operations of Government by taxation rather than by the increase of Government obligations, and in my judgment this will meet with the approval of the people and of Congress."

The President's proposal to impose graduated taxes on indistributed corporate earnings is designed ostensibly to accomplish the fourfold purpose of converting large surpluses into dividend payments, equalling the personal and corporate taxes, preventing tax evasion by stockholders who can afford to leave earnings undistributed and raising additional revenue. The plan would exempt banks and insurance companies from its operations, it was said.

Distinguishing between reserves and undistributed earnings at his press conference yesterday, the President emphasized that any corporation under his plan still would have the right to set aside sufficient reserves for depreciaton and working capital.

The President cited the hypothetical case of himself and any reporter present controlling 51 per cent of the stock of a good corporation, with other reporters in the room controlling 49 per cent as stockholders. Should the corporation net $100,000 profit in a given year, the minority might decide they could do with out the dividends and invest the profits instead in a new plant. The fair method, he contended, would be to pay out the $100,000 in dividends, and then ask other stockholders to buy new stock to erect the plant addition.

The President said he thought the Administration plan would not prevent legitimate expansion or effect existing surplus, but might prevent unnecessary expansion.

In his message to Congress, the President said:

"Such a revision of our corporate taxes would effect great simplication in tax procedure, in corporate accounting and in the understanding of the whole subject by the citizens of the Nation. It would constitute distinct progress in tax reform."

Example of Levy.

Using President Roosevelt's own illustration of a corporation netting $1,000,000 profits, under the present tax on corporate income, the Government now would collect $15,000 of this. This tax would be repealed under the new law, and a tax on undivided profits substituted which would net the Government approximately $33,330, or a third of the net profits. If, on the other hand, the corporation elected to pay this out in dividends, each income taxpayer would have to pay a proportionate amount into the Treasury. Under the existing law, only those drawing surtax incomes are required to pay taxes on dividends.

Outlining the Treasury's fiscal needs, the President told Congress in his message that the Government needs $120,000,000 a year for nine years to finance bonus payment, $500,000,000 a year indefinitely to pay for the new farm program, and $517,000,000 spread over two or three years to reimburse the Treasury for losses sustained by invalidation of AAA processing taxes.

Insisting he was leaving to the discretion of Congress the formulation of the taxes, he nevertheless "invited attention" to certain tax "suggestions," including the undistributed corporate earnings tax, which he said "would accomplish an important tax reform, remove two major inequalities in our tax system, and stop 'leaks' in present surtaxes."

Text of President Roosevelt's Tax Message

To the Congress of the United States:

On January 3, 1936, in my annual budget message to the Congress, I pointed out that without the item for relief the budget was in balance. Since that time an important item of revenue has been eliminated through a decision of the Supreme Court, and an additional annual charge has been placed on the Treasury through the enactment of the adjusted compensation act.

I said in my budget message:

"• • • the many legislative acts creating the machinery for recovery were all predicated on two interdependent beliefs. First, the measures would immediately cause a great increase in the annual expenditures of the Government—many of these expenditures, however, in the form of loans which could ultimately return to the Treasury. Second, as a result of the simultaneous attack on the many fronts I have indicated, the receipts of the Government would rise definitely and sharply during the following few years, while greatly increased expenditure for the purposes stated, coupled with rising values and the stopping of losses would, over a period of years, diminish the need for work relief and thereby reduce Federal expenditures. The increase in revenues would ultimately meet and pass the declining cost of relief.

"This policy adopted in the spring of 1933, has been confirmed in actual practice by the Treasury figures of 1934, of 1935, and by the estimates for the fiscal years of 1936 and 1937.

"There is today no doubt of the fundamental soundness of the policy of 1933. If we proceed along the path we have followed and with the results attained up to the present time we shall continue our successful progress during the coming years."

If we are to maintain this clear-cut and sound policy, it is incumbent upon us to make good to the Federal Treasury both the loss of revenue caused by the Supreme Court decision and the increase in expenses caused by the adjusted compensation payment act. I emphasize that adherence to consistent policy calls for such action.

To be specific: The Supreme Court decision adversely affected the budget in an amount of $1,017,000,000 during the fiscal year 1936 and the fiscal year 1937. This figure is arrived at as follows:

Deficit to date (expenditures chargeable to processing taxes less processing taxes collected) in excess of that contemplated in the 1937 budget, $281,000,000.

Estimated expenditures to be made from supplemental appropriation approved in the supplemental appropriation act, 1936, $296,000,000.

Estimated expenditures to be made under the soil conservation and domestic allotment act, $440,000,000.

Total additional deficit 1936 and 1937, due to Supreme Court decision and adjusted farm program, $1,017,000,000.

For the purposes of clarity, I divide the present total additional revenue needs of the Government into the permanent and the temporary ones.

Permanent Treasury income of $500,000,000 is required to offset expenditures which will be made annually as a result of the soil conservation and domestic allotment act recently enacted by the Congress and approved by me; and an additional sum recurring annually for nine years will be required to amortize the total cost of the adjusted compensation payment act.

The net effect of paying the veterans' bonus in 1936, instead of 1945, is to add an annual charge of $120,000,000 a year to the $160,000,000 already in the burget.

We are called upon, therefore, to raise by some form of permanent taxation an annual amount of $620,000,000. It may be said, truthfully and correctly, that $500,000,000 of this amount represents substitute taxes in place of the old processing taxes, and that only $120,000,000 represents new taxes not hitherto levied.

I leave, of course, to the discretion of the Congress the formulation of the appropriate taxes for the needed permanent revenue. I invite your attention, however, to a form of tax which would accomplish an important tax reform, remove two major inequalities in our tax system, and stop "leaks" in present surtaxes.

Extended study of methods of improving present taxes on income from business warrants the consideration of changes to provide a fairer distribution of the tax load among all the beneficial owners of business profits whether derived from unincorporated enterprises or from incorporated businesses and whether distributed to the real owners as earned or withheld from them. The existing difference between corporate taxes and those imposed on owners of unincorporated businesses renders incorporation of small businesses difficult or impossible.

The accumulation of surplus in corporations controlled by taxpayers with large incomes is encouraged by the present freedom of undistributed corporate income from surtaxes. Since stockholders are the beneficial owners of both distributed and undistributed corporate income, the aim, as a matter of fundamental equity, should be to seek equality of beneficial owners. As the law now stands our corporate taxes dip too deeply into the shares of corporate earnings going to stockholders who need the disbursement of dividends; while the shares of stockholders who can afford to leave earnings undistributed escape surtaxes altogether.

This method of evading surtaxes constitutes a problem as old as the income tax itself. Repeated attempts by the Congress to prevent this form of evasion have not been successful. The evil has been a growing one. It has now reached disturbing proportions from the standpoint of the inequality it represents and of its serious effect on the Federal revenue. Thus the Treasury estimates that, during the calendar year 1936, over $4,500,000,000 of corporate income will be withheld from stockholders. If this undistributed income were distributed, it would be added to the income of stockholders and there taxed as is other personal income. But, as matters now stand, it will be withheld from stockholders by those in control of these corporations. In one year alone, the Government will be deprived of revenues amounting to over $1,300,000,000.

A proper tax on corporate income (including dividends from other corporations), which is not distributed as earned, would correct the serious twofold inequality in our taxes on business profits if accompanied by a repeal of the present corporate income tax, the capital stock tax, the related excess profits tax and the present exemption of dividends from the normal tax on individual incomes. The rate on undistributed corporate income should be graduated and so fixed as to yield approximately the same revenue as would be yielded if corporate profits were distributed and taxed in the hands of stockholders.

Such a revision of our corporate taxes would effect great simplification in tax procedure, in corporate accounting, and in the understanding of the whole subject by the citizens of the Nation. It would constitute distinct progress in tax reform.

The Treasury Department will be glad to submit its estimates to the Congress showing that this simplification and removal of inequalities can, without unfairness, be put into practice so as to yield the full amount of $620,000,000—the amount I have indicated above as being necessary.

Turning to the temporary revenue needs of the Government, there is the item of $517,000,000, which affects principally the current fiscal year. This amount must in some way be restored to the Treasury, even though the process of restoration might be spread over two years or three years.

In this case also the formulation of taxes lies wholly in the discretion of the Congress. I venture, however, to call your attention to two suggestions.

The first relates to the taxation of what may well be termed a windfall received by certain taxpayers who shifted to others the burden of processing taxes which were impounded and returned to them or which otherwise have remained unpaid. In unequal position is that vast number of other taxpayers who did not resort to such court action and have paid their taxes to the Government. By far the greater part of the processing taxes was in the main either passed on to consumers or taken out of the price paid producers. The Congress recognized this fact last August and provided in section 21 (d) of the agricultural adjustment act that, in the event of the invalidation of the processing taxes, only those processors who had borne the burden of these taxes should be permitted to receive refunds. The return of the impounded funds and failure to pay taxes that were passed on result in unjust enrichment, contrary to the spirit of that enactment. A tax on the beneficiaries unfairly enriched by the return or non-payment of this Federal excise would take a major part of this windfall income for the benefit of the public. Much of this revenue would accrue to the Treasury during the fiscal years 1936 and 1937.

The other suggestion relates to a temporary tax to yield the portion of $517,000,000 not covered by the windfall tax. Such a tax could be spread over two years or three years. An excise on the processing of certain agricultural products is worth considering. By increasing the number of commodities so taxed, by greatly lowering the rates of the old processing tax and by spreading the tax over two or three years, only a relatively light burden would be imposed on the producers, consumers or processors.

Guffey Act Legality Upheld by Miners

By the Associated Press.

Constitutionality of the Guffey act to regulate the soft coal industry was defended yesterday in a brief filed with the Supreme Court by the United Mine Workers of America.

The document, presented in connection with the arguments on the legislation March 11, contended the act was "removed from the taint of Fascism and contemplates a reasonable spirit of self-government by the industry itself.

"It is obvious that the very consideration of the subject involves weighing the responsibilities of national sovereignty in a field wholly reserved to it," the brief said.

"Is Congress, charged with the duty of providing 'all appropriate legislation for the protection and advancement of interstate commerce' powerless here?

"What taboo attends the field of labor relations that necessarily paralyzes the regulatory hand of the Government?"

5 Gone Since Friday On Trip to Scale Peak

Yosemite, Calif., March 3 (A.P.).—Five Sierra Club mountaineers, who left here Friday to attempt the first midwinter climb of Mount Lyell, 13,090 feet, highest peak in Yosemite National Park, had not returned today. No anxiety for their safety was felt. The climbers expected the ascent to take at least three days. Recently fallen snow was almost sure to delay them.

Members of the party were Bestor Robinson, Oakland, Calif., attorney; Lewis F. Clark, San Francisco telephone engineer; Einar Neilson, Oakland mechanical engineer; Boynton Kaiser, University of California graduate student, and David Brower, of Yosemite.

No End Of Books

By Theodore Hall

Seeing Ourselves

FOR us to read a guidebook to America and the Americans possesses exactly the peculiar feeling of looking into a mirror after a three-month rough camping trip. "Why, there," we exclaim to ourselves, if we are so favored, "is that dimple, that cowlick, that wart!" It is the surprised recognition of an obviousness we had forgot.

Ronald Elwy Mitchell, with more than usual British kindliness in his heart, spent three years among us, traveling up and down the continent to savor us from Brattleboro to Hollywood. No one would deny him the privilege of writing a book—we have had too many volumes from three-week visitors to be unwelcoming of this deeper research. "America: a Practical Handbook" (Hamish Hamilton, London; Thomas F. Kyle, N. Y., $2) is shrewd, entertaining, fresh-spirited. Certainly it is no ordinary guidebook which will tell you how much to tip a New York taxi driver, how to pop popcorn and record the observation that "the women are more precocious than the men."

This last item, indeed, will indicate the engaging quality of Mr. Mitchell's studies in America—he adduces the evidence that a young Vassar woman of 17 told him that she and her friend found it necessary to talk down to men two or three years their senior. We may not have caused Mr. Mitchell to go around triple-starring our cathedrals, but we have opened his eyes wide once or twice.

• • • •

HE is writing for the English—"the most prejudiced of the four British races against America"—and so we must not mind if he retails some familiarities. In the style of the American Mercury's "Americana" pages, he is roundly pleased to notice signs like "Nook de Beaute," "Ye Olde Gasse Statyone," and "Grabeteria." We grin ourselves. But do we not have a blind spot for the notice behind the counters in restaurants flamboyantly printed by the tens of thousands, which marks our taste for "standardized witticism?"—"Mary had a little lamb—what will you have?" Our hopefulness that the joke will be new and pleasing, Mr. Mitchell observes, was not borne out in his presence.

Nor are we aware of a point of more subtlety in the language of money. He notices that we say "Give me a dime" when we want the coin, and "Have you got ten cents?" when we want the sum, although it comes out the same in the end. "Listen for the difference," he advises his countrymen. "Most Americans are unaware that they make any."

• • • •

DO we consider that our country lacks ritual? Mr. Mitchell stood bemused before the spectacle of the Fifth Avenue bus conductor, who gives you your full change and then holds out the little machine into which you solemnly deposit your dime. That gave him pause. But we must not think we impressed him with the buses themselves. "After the luxury of London buses you will find the Fifth Avenue coach a prehistoric little object with no room for your knees, reminiscent of the things that trundled along Oxford street some 20 years ago."

So much of our commonplaceness was deliciously strange to him. We do not pay for theater programs; we are continually drinking water (the usual welcome in a restaurant is a paper napkin and a glass of water;) we really do obey traffic signs and the markers "Do not walk on the grass" (and he acknowledges that we are, hence, not quite so lawless as he had been led to believe at home); our employers do not, as in England, expect us to stay our whole lives in the jobs for which we apply; we eat with the fork in the right hand and lay down the knife before every mouthful; and we are likely to have dinner at 6 o'clock. Dear me, and so, over the breadth of the country, we do!

But let the wary Englishman not fear a strange land. We can show him New England, and Mr. Mitchell declares that "it isn't foreign . . . It smacks of the Hampshire woods, the New Forest, of Warwickshire lanes . . . It's as native as the core of Sussex or Somerset or Buckinghamshire."

• • • •

HE found that Sauk Center, Minn., was proud of being the original Main street. He found that we are amazingly polite, and equally amazingly naive. He despised our customs with tea, and once, forgetting in Montreal that he was back in the Empire, he called out after the waitress: "With cream, please, not lemon." The Canadian girl gave him "the kind of look that made the Empire what it is today," and she said with tartness: "We never serve tea with lemon here!"

But hold on, Mr. Mitchell! After telling us so much about ourselves, won't you revise the guidebooks of England? Did you ask for cream? It has been our fond and literate notion that no Britisher would consider anything but milk.

Blouse-Buying Brings Women To City's Shops

By Ruth Anne Davis.

NOW THAT suits are centers of attraction blouses are also in the limelight. Almost every other woman you meet has bought, is buying or planning to buy her spring suit—and, of course, a blouse.

She will find blouse shopping a joy if she visits a certain G street shop. Here there's a center case and counter devoted to nothing but blouses—blouses carefully selected for discriminating customers and conservative budgets.

Among them is a group made of Van Shan—or cotton shantung. Not one that isn't every inch a blouse! Mannish? Well, yes, but not too mannish. Exquisitely tailored and built to last. Wash? Perfectly! They have regular shirt tails and for that reason can be depended to stay in one's skirt and not come straggling forth.

Attic May Hold Treasures.

IF ON ONE of your spring tours through the attic you come across any old books, prints, maps or autographs, don't pass them by too casually. Take them to a certain local book shop and here you'll find specialists who can tell you what these things are worth—and who might buy them from you.

Here, too, you'll find some mighty interesting collections of books and prints. The shop is an enchanting place in which to spend an hour or two.

Hand Hooked Rugs.

THERE aren't many of us who can resist the charm of a hand-hooked rug. There's just something about them that defies description.

That's one reason why so many people are flocking through the doors of a Connecticut avenue shop. Here there's a marvelous group of hooked rugs on sale all this week. They range in size from 18x36 inches to 6x9 feet, and in price from 99 cents to $4.95.

An Interesting Display.

SOME night this week when you want to see an interesting display and hear a brief talk, then drop by a certain shop about 8:30 o'clock. Here, the owner with his usual run of ingenuity is conducting a novel series of events. For instance, tonight, he is displaying tapestries, velvets, and rough weave fabrics and discussing their uses. Tomorrow he shows chintz, linens, glass curtains, etc., and talks on them. Friday the subject is damasks, brocades, brocatelles, and Fortuny prints. Saturdays tapestries, velvets again.

To Soften Water.

LOTS OF time you blame rips, runs, and breaks on the quality of your clothes. You should blame the quality of the water. Hard water you know forms sticky curds when it is mixed with soap. These curds get into fabrics between the threads and dry there. You've probably often noticed how stiff a dress, or pair of hose, or scarf, or blouse is after it's been washed. The result—quick wearing out.

One way to prevent this is to change the water from hard to soft. You can do this quite simply by means of some water softening equipment sold right here in Washington.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

AN array of dignified relations is one thing—for them get out the best white damask tablecloth, polish the silver and glassware till it gleams, select the service plates with a sober eye, arrange the flowers carefully, light tall candles at the witching hour. Set the stage for interesting conversation, scintilating repartee—but not, friend, for any maudlin levity.

A merry informal family is quite another matter—for them a dinner invitation means a party—let it be gay. Borrow the theme song from a jovial German beer garden and set the table with rough, bright linen, pottery plates, steins and pewter. Or have a Japanese sukiyaki party . . . for this get some old-time matting to spread on the floor. Then some electric grills to go on the floor (since the Japanese sit on the floor). You'll need a grill to about every six guests. Supply a big iron frying pan for each grill, a pot of tea, plates a bowl of cooked rice and the raw ingredients of sukiyaki. The feast is cooked by the guests—right on the floor and eaten there.

Sabins, Curies, Not Agitation Held Guard of Women's Rights

Dean Virginia C. Gildersleeve to Discuss Barnard's Work With Exchange Students as Guest of Honor at Dinner Given by Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

A FEW MORE FLORENCE SABINS and Mme. Curies could do more to strengthen the position of women today than any campaign or clamor to preserve women's "rights," or prevent discrimination against women in public life.

So declares Miss Virginia C. Gildersleeve, Dean of Barnard College, who is visiting in Washington. Tonight, as guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Dean Gildersleeve will speak on "Citizens of the World," and discuss Barnard's work with exchange students from other countries.

Yesterday at the Dodge Hotel she discussed a variety of subjects, ranging from woman's chances in a changing world to the value of a liberal education in preparing girls for careers, either in or out of the home.

Admitting she is "not a feminist in the militant sense," Miss Gildersleeve nveertheless thinks that women deserve consideration as human beings. She thinks the chief task before them now, however, is "to buckle down and prove themselves worthy of the ground they have gained so far."

Back to the Kitchen.

She believes American women will never allow themselves to be bundled back to the kitchen. "If they do, the work women used to do in the home, such as baking and canning, will go back with them, thus increasing unemployment. "Then, too," she added, "there would be another big problem—that of making the maiden aunt welcome at the family fireside, after she had been deprived of her job."

She further expressed the opinion that persons who believe in sending wage-earning women back to the home to relieve unemployment, need "a long-range view of the situation."

Discussing changing trends in feminine education, "the gentlewoman and scholar" who has been dean of Barnard for a quarter century, is convinced the depression showed the value of a general education, in contrast to the practical or utilitarian type of training, that prepared a person for only one type of work. She believes the cultural aspect of education is more important today than it was a decade ago, because, as she expressed it, "modern women must be trained for leisure as well as for work; and they must prepare themselves for more than one kind of employment. We educators must keep students elastic, so they can more easily find a place in a world of constantly shifting scenes."

She mentioned that wide-spread unemployment still makes it difficult for girls to get positions as soon as they finish college. "The only ones who find jobs quickly are those trained in social service work," she said. "That is one field in which the demand is obviously greater than the supply."

She has observed that the average girl, entering college, has no definite idea about which career, if any, she wishes to follow, "unless she wants to be a teacher or a doctor. In this case her mind is usually made up before she is out of the cradle."

Girls of the Past.

She has noticed modern college girls geenrally have a wider range of interests than girls of the past. "Although our only two required subjects at Barnard are English and hygiene, last year every girl in our graduation class had taken a course in economics or sociology," she said. "There is also among our students an increasing interest in international affairs."

Emphasizing the fact college today assumes a responsibility regarding a girl's health and social life, she said modern students are given help in working out emotional problems, as well as aid in selecting courses in the light of which their vocational and avocational future may be planned.

Dean Gildersleeve believes, however, there is much room for improvement in scholastic training. "The curse of education is still superficiality," she said.

Again touching on the subject of "women's rights," past and present, Miss Gildersleeve said, "There aren't any feminists in college today. Modern girls take their position for granted, seemed to be bored by any reference to feminism, and wonder why anyone clamors about 'rights' when women have the vote."

"But what about the increasing discrimination against working women today" she was asked. "If women could be sent back to the home in Germany, couldn't the same thing happen to American women?"

"Perhaps," she answered, thoughtfully. "Certainly, it seems we are in danger of losing some of the ground we have gained. Oh, occasionally," she added, her dark eyes twinkling. "I admit it looks as if we might have to lean heavily on the militants once more; and even join them in a fight—not for 'rights' as women, but for privileges every human being deserves."

Grinnell Dining Room Knitting Needles Banned

Arrival in Town of Established Suitor Forces Girl to Break Date With Another Young Man Who Didn't Know of Rival's Existence; Now Young Man No Longer Calls.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been keeping company with a young man for nearly eight years. He is a perfect gentleman and has been very nice to me. He doesn't come to see me very often as he works away from here, but I know he doesn't want me to go out with other fellows and would be angry if he knew it. I enjoy the company of nice boys and do have dates once in a while without his knowing it. Still I always cared less for the others until six months ago, when I met another young man who seemed to be exactly the type of man I admire. I went with him regularly for a couple of months, without telling him of the other man. Then I had occasion to break a date with him when the friend of longer standing came to town unexpectedly.

* * * *

I hated to do it and wonder if I should have done it. Afterward I explained the situation and he didn't seem to be angry. But since that time—which was about two months ago—he hasn't asked me for any more dates and it is as if I had never met him. I really care for him and believe I could have forgotten the other man for him. What should I do, or is there anything to do? Marriage has been discussed with the first man, but nothing definitely decided on.
Sincerely, LONESOME.

Ill-advised Secretiveness Spoils Friendships.

DEAR LONESOME: There seems to be nothing to do now but take your medicine with the best possible grace. It sounds to me as if the second young man might have seized on the first plausible opportunity for breaking off his friendship with you, perhaps because he had grown tired of it, or maybe because he realized you were taking his attentions more seriously than he intended them. On the other hand, it's just possible he cared for you a great deal and trusted you implicitly, as men are apt to trust the women they love, and that your petty deceit deeply wounded his pride and completely destroyed his trust. But if the latter is true, it seems to me he would not have taken the episode of the broken date so lightly and then completely faded from the picture. Unless he is an exceptional sort of man, he would have stormed or sulked or sneered or pleaded, and would have appeared on the scene before the end of two months—supposing he valued your association very highly.

* * * *

Your mistake has been in keeping your long-standing friendship with the first man a secret from men friends more recently acquired. It has also been a mistake to let the first man think you lead a cloistered life during the long intervals of his absences. In doing either you are defeating the very purpose you hope to achieve—which is to establish in each case more binding ties of friendship or perhaps love. No man recently met values a woman less because he learns she has an absent suitor of long standing in the background. As a matter of fact, the existence of such a suitor is a subtle compliment to her enduring attractiveness. Nor will the absent suitor of long standing think less of his beloved if he learns she is basking in the admiring attentiveness of men in her immediate environment.

* * * *

The best advice I can give you is to be more casually candid, less secretive, about your friendships with respective men in future. The person who presents himself in false guise in any relationship is courting disaster, sooner or later. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Snails, Honey Ants Suggested in Crow Diet by Professor

Columbus, Ohio, March 3. (AP).—A crow-meat diet was pronounced fit for crow hunters today by Dr. Raymond C. Osburn, head of Ohio State University's department of zoology, but to satisfy truly exotic tastes in food he submitted this menu:

Entree—Snails or honey ants.
Soup—Bird's nest or terrapin.
Dessert—Minced crow pie.

'Slinky Girls' Best, Toronto Students Decide in Ballot

Answering a magazine questionnaire on the type of girl they preferred, the students placed "slinky" girls first, "romantic" girls second, "sophisticated" girls third and "fluffy" maidens at the bottom.

Citing the qualities they admired most in a girl, they placed vitality first, neatness second, beauty third, distinction fourth, style fifth, sweetness sixth and sex appeal seventh.

TWO ON SAFARI

—By GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN—

Ballard Mallory, young American explorer, accepts a commission to find the young Hon. Laurence Morland, who has disappeared in Africa. Aboard ship he meets Josephine Cascoden, enigmatic young Englishwoman, who calmly announces she is going with him. He tries to prevent her, their wills clash, but she outwits him. At last he agrees and, at the hotel in Lourenco Marques, provides equipment for her which she tells Mrs. Semster, the housekeeper, she will not wear.

Chapter XIII.

Pack Everything!

"I DON'T need them; I have my own riding togs."

"Breeches and boots?"

"Yes."

"Too hot," declared Mrs. Semster. "Besides, you can't walk in riding boots." She opened a huge carton and took out half a dozen pith helmets. "Only one of these—whichever fits best."

"I hate all those browns, yellows and greens," said Josephine. "I prefer white."

"White—on the veldt?" interjected Mrs. Semster with a sad shake of her head. "They won't let you have even a white handkerchief because white scares the game."

"I'm not going shooting."

Abruptly the woman straightened and turned, so changed in appearance it was as though a new person had come to life within her shell. The sallowness of her face was more marked than ever, but her black eyes were enlarged and her thin chest seemed to be pumping at the double quick to supply breath to her body.

"Oh, Miss, aren't you?" she gulped. "Then—then what? Oh, Miss, you're so young, so toothsome——"

Mallory's Preparations.

"Toothsome!" gasped Josephine, and broke into laughter. "What an extraordinary word! I'm sure you mean it for a compliment."

"I do indeed. Why, Miss, you came only yesterday and already the whole town is talking of nothing else."

"That's a bit of cheek," said Josephine, abruptly sobered. "Suppose we try on some of these things now."

Immediately Mrs. Semster returned to her station with a sigh. She became the expert assistant and a moment later Josephine, in nothing but cotton combies and stockings, was standing like a white statue before the pier glass.

"You seem to have guessed at my size fairly well," she commented.

"It was Mr. Mallory, Miss. He looked over all our girls, then he went out and came back presently with one from another shop. She was as flustered as a wet hen till she found out he wasn't taking her with him permanently. Then he gave her a pound note and she cried, but it was all right."

"I gather Mr. Mallory is in a hurry."

"A great hurry, Miss. He's borrowed three Swahili head boys from his friends and half a dozen Kaffirs. You've seen three of them and he's using the rest himself."

Josephine slipped on a shirt, then sat on the edge of a chair while Mrs. Semster, kneeling at her side, hauled the breeches snug.

"Not bad," she commented, "an inch more of cuff and they'll do you very nicely. You haven't a pair of walking boots, have you?"

"One," said Josephine. "I brought them along on a chance. You'll find them in the closet."

"A lucky chance, Miss, because naturally we could do nothing about footwear with the exception of mosquito boots which don't have to fit."

Defense Against Mosquitos.

"What are mosquito boots?" asked Josephine as she opened the cuffs of the jodhpurs to tie her laces.

"I'll show you in a minute," said Mrs. Semster. "Now stand up and take a look at yourself."

Josephine colored with pleasure and her eyes shone before the apparition which confronted her. "I look like a boy," she exclaimed, "like an awfully nice young boy!"

"I said Mr. Mallory was efficient," reiterated Mrs. Semster.

"Now let's see the mosquito boots."

"Here they are," complied Mrs. Semster, taking out two pairs of rather shapeless knee-high boots in soft leather. "You pull them on over your pajamas in the evenings to keep mosquitoes and other insects from biting your ankles."

"I see. So that's why he allowed me two suits of lounging pajamas." She picked up one of the helmets and was astonished at its lightness. "Like a feather!" she exclaimed.

"It's because it's true pith, miss; he wouldn't have anything else. The strap across the front comes down," explained Mrs. Semster, "and buckles under your chin. But you wouldn't need to do that except on a very windy day."

Jo was in the grip of a strange excitement quite distinct from the elation which comes to any woman through the simple process of trying on new clothes. While the charm of daintiness was totally missing, she was aware of the far more subtle sensation arising from a conviction of utter transformation. These clothes divided her from the known past and placed her upon a threshold never before crossed. At that moment Ballard's voice asked at the door, "Is it all right for me to come in?"

"Quite all right, Mr. Mallory," said Mrs. Semster.

He entered and for an instant stood spellbound, stopped in his tracks by the apparition which confronted him. A smile—more of a grin than a smile—spread across his face and shone in his eyes.

"Not bad, Mrs. Semster," he decided, "not at all bad. But you'd better reinforce the seams around the patches and tighten up the calves a full quarter of an inch; these khaki things are bound to stretch." He walked up to Josephine, inserted three fingers inside the waistband and pulled. "Too loose," he declared; "make them snug enough so she won't have to depend on a belt."

"I won't go without a belt," protested Josephine.

"Naturally," he agreed, "but wrinkles won't help, belt or no belt. Can you finish up today, Mrs. Semster?"

"Why?" asked Josephine. "What's the hurry?"

"We're sailing at dawn, my dear," said Ballard with a touch of exultation. Then he corrected himself hurriedly. "I mean we're sailing at dawn."

Mallory drew Mrs. Semster aside. "Here's your check list," he said, handing her a slip of paper, "pinned to a present for you."

"Five pounds!" gasped the woman. "Oh, Mr. Mallory, I couldn't—I really couldn't——"

"You haven't earned it yet," said Mallory, "but you will. I've paid for all the articles on the list, so if you let her have another blessed thing, you pay for it yourself. As for earning the money, I expect you to hang around until Miss Cascoden sails."

Mrs. Semster's eyelids lowered and faint pink tinged her cheeks. "You mean I'm to watch her, sir?" she murmured, her spare body straightening with importance.

Sleuthing.

"Watch her?" exclaimed Ballard, taking no trouble to lower his voice. "Not at all. All I said was hang around. Make yourself useful, pack everything—the things that stay as well as those that are going—keep her company and do anything she asks, I'm going to be busy."

"Since Mrs. Semster is doing all the packing," asked Josephine from her stand before the pier glass, "is there any reason why I shouldn't go with you?"

"Too hot, and I'll be traveling too fast," declared Ballard, making for the door. "You stay here."

She watched him go, a frown tugging at her brows. She was trying to reconcile the Mallory of this morning with the Mallory of last night, and failed. What had happened to make him so care-free? Was this the man who couldn't see himself shoving his head into a hanging noose? Quick suspicion stirred within her. How ridiculous she would be if he went and never came back! She snatched up handkerchiefs, money and compact, thrust them into her breeches pockets, and turned on Mrs. Semster.

"Pack everything just as he said; I'm going with him."

Plain Knitted Cotton Frocks Are Ideal for Summer Wear

MANY a knitting needle is now click-click-clicking away on some smart summer frock. And small wonder! Few hot weather clothes combine the practical qualities and smart appearance that a trim, cool cotton knit frock does.

The one in the accompanying photograph has a severely plain knit skirt and a neat overblouse that molds itself to the figure. Both skirt and blouse are of one stitch, while the three-inch band around the neck and also the narrow belt are contrasting. The short, snug sleeves accentuate the clear-cut, streamlined effect of the frock.

Such a cotton knit serves no end of needs. If it's a dark color—blue, black, brown or green—it may turn into a cool and comfortable traveling frock when worn with a light topcoat. It's a splendid motoring frock, since it never wrinkles.

It's good for casual morning and afternoon wear, and excels at small luncheons and country club get-togethers.

The woman who gives her time and labor to knitting this type frock may rest assured it will serve her well for many a spring and summer season. Its very plainness says emphatically it will remain in style for seasons to come.

With this dress a change of accessories gives new and dashing effects. That's why it has practicality plus. Effective with it would be a knitted coat bag or scarf, contrasting or harmonizing colors. Either crocheted or plain gloves could be used to heighten color contrast. However, the fundamental beauty of the dress lies in its simplicity of line and in the beauty of the stitch. (And it's a stitch that is amazingly easy to follow.)

Preferred colors for this type of dress would undoubtedly be pastels. And in the pastel field this season there are some soft, mellow shades of coral and some glowing citrons that are quite irresistible. For directions send a stamp to Frances Mangum, The Post Fashion Editor.

Drug Addicts Cured of Habit By New Method

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THE NORMAL individual has no difficulty in denying himself the use of narcotic drugs. A patient afflicted with some painful disease which requires the prolonged administration of morphine has little trouble in discontinuing its use when the need disappears. Rarely will treatment for drug addiction be required in such cases.

There is a group of persons, however, who have become habitual users of some form of opium or of cocaine, and who employ one or the other of these drugs daily in large quantities. In the first instance the narcotic may have been taken for the purpose of producing a momentary thrill. On the other hand the daily employment of any drug, even though harmless, unless it is really needed, should be discouraged. After a while the one who is vitally dependent on morphine cannot break the chains that bind him to this god of sleep and dreams.

And too often the addict is possessed of sub-standard moral fiber. He suffers from a feeling of inadequacy and resorts to narcotics as a means of submerging his doubts and fears. Under its influence he becomes brave, even desperate, and he will perform acts quite outside his normal range. If the habit is long continued there is a dulling of mentality and a general physical deterioration. These unfortunates forget to eat and lack of nourishment is accompanied by anemia and a lowering of the general body resistance.

Can drug addiction be cured? Although the subject has been studied for centuries, only recently have methods been devised that offer real promise.

Recently Klingman and Everts have announced a new, intensive treatment. It consists in the use of scopolamine and pilocarpine, two compounds that are opposed to each other in their effects upon the human body. Enough scopolamine was given to bring on unconsciousness for from 24 to 36 hours. It was found that the patients regained mental clarity by the end of 48 hours. These physicions report that in a large number of cases no desire whatever remains for the drug formerly used. For several weeks thereafter small doses of scopolamine were continued daily. Approximately one-half the patients so treated were entirely relieved. Those who returned to the habit belonged to the group of chronic users who had become sub-standard mentally and physically.

Only an expert should attempt to manage a case of morphine addiction, and there are physicians who have devoted their lives to studies along this line.

Mrs. Roosevelt Has Set Many White House Precedents in Her Three Years as First Lady

Conferences With Press Stimulate Public Interest

Schedule of Activities of Typical Week Illustrates Dynamic Energy and Varied Interests; Informality Is Outstanding Characteristic as Hostess.

By Francesca McKenney.

Three years ago today the President took his oath of office and delivered his inaugural address from the stand on the Capitol steps, with Mrs. Roosevelt, gowned in the now famous Eleanor blue, standing by his side. It is interesting to look back over the past three years and note the many interests of the First Lady and the customs she has either introduced or revived.

The First Lady, always active in social and civic affairs, organized weekly press conferences to aid newspaperwomen to get their facts straight. Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday declared that judging from the number of clippings and editorials sent to her from all parts of the country, the press conferences have stimulated public interest in the White House and in the pursuits of women. She believes that women have a special contribution to make to civic and political life.

Gridiron Widows' Party.

One of the most interesting parties introduced by Mrs. Roosevelt is that in honor of the Widows of the Gridiron, which she has held on the evening of the Gridiron dinner. The first year all the guests wore costumes and many skits were presented during the early part of the evening. Last autumn costumes were optional except for those taking part in the skits. Mrs. Roosevelt and her daughter, Mrs. John Boettiger, have taken part in at least one or more skits each year.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt also have entertained at a dance each spring in honor of men and women in the journalistic world, including publishers, editors, fiction writers and outstanding news writers.

One of the delightful customs that Mrs. Roosevelt has revived is that of serving refreshments at the state receptions, a custom which was discontinued after the Wilson Administration. Up until three years ago smoking was not permitted in the Executive Mansion during large functions. President and Mrs. Roosevelt arranged to have the small dining room open on the evening of the first state reception for guests who wished to smoke. Later a room on the first floor was arranged for those desiring to smoke, as it was decided too dangerous a fire hazard to allow smoking on the second floor.

Gracious Hostess.

The First Lady, a gracious hostess, likes to entertain, which she does frequently, aside from the state functions, with many teas, luncheons, dinners and musicales, which are very often replaced in the spring by al fresco picnic parties and garden parties.

Heretofore at state receptions specially invited guests were the only ones allowed to pass the heavy velvet ropes, but since the President and Mrs. Roosevelt have been in the Executive Mansion there have been no ropes after the honor guests had passed through the line, and guests have been allowed to wander from room to room.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt have entertained at a number of parties for their grandchildren and at dances for their sons and daughter.

Enjoys Sports.

The First Lady enjoys many sports and is frequently seen on the bridle paths of Rock Creek Park on her favorite horse. She drives her own roadster and likes nothing better than to spend several days with a friend motoring, destination "unknown."

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt also spend a great deal of their time aboard the Presidential yacht during the hot months, taking their many friends on cruises down the river over week-ends.

Mrs. Roosevelt enjoyed several days of coasting with her children and grandchildren this winter at her home at Hyde Park. Yesterday much merriment reigned at the press conference when the First Lady was questioned on the "black eye" she was reported to have received while coasting over the snow with her daughter near their home at Hyde Park.

There was no trace of a black eye, but Mrs. Roosevelt said that her eye and the side of her face had been scratched from the crust on the snow when she and her daughter had a spill while attempting to coast down a steep hill on one sled.

Mrs. Roosevelt not only has time for all her friends and the social functions that the First Lady is called upon to attend, but she finds time for many benefit functions and so contributes to much needed funds, for she knows that the wife of the President of the United States is a tremendous drawing card.

Typical Week.

A typical week in the life of the First Lady will illustrate her varied activities. Yesterday morning she started with the press conference, then went to a luncheon given in her honor by Mrs. Joseph W. Byrns, wife of the Speaker of the House, at the Mayflower Hotel. The guests included wives of the chairmen of the various committees of the House, the wives of the members of the Cabinet and women members of the House of Representatives. Yesterday's luncheon was the first of a series planned by Mrs. Byrns, the others to be given after the Lenten season.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Roosevelt entertained at tea at 4 o'clock at the White House, and for another group of guests at 5 o'clock. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt had as their overnight guests at the Executive Mansion the president and publisher of the New York Times, Mr. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, and Mrs. Sulzberger, of New York City, who arrived in the Capital yesterday afternoon.

Today Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain at a luncheon and tonight she will accompany the President to the Cabinet dinner at the Mayflower Hotel. A musicale, at which Lawrence Tibbett will sing, will follow the dinner.

Tomorrow there will be two teas, one at 4 o'clock and the other at 5 o'clock, and on Friday there will be another tea at the Executive Mansion.

Tonight Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, sr., parents of the Secretary of the Treasury, will be overnight guests at the White House and on Saturday Sir Arthur Willett will arrive in Washington to spend the week-end with the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt will attend services at the National Cathedral on Sunday morning. That afternoon Mrs. Roosevelt will leave the Capital for Grand Rapids, Mich. She will return on March 16 in time for her press conference at 11 a. m.

The First Lady will deliver a series of lectures on "Ways to Peace" during her absence from the Capital. Her first lecture will be on Monday, March 9, at Grand Rapids, Mich.; then on Tuesday, March 10, at Cleveland, Ohio; Dayton on March 11 and Toledo on March 12. Mrs. Roosevelt will attend the scholastic press dinner in New York on March 14.

There will be a musicale at the White House on the afternoon of March 16. That evening Mrs. Roosevelt will be the guest of honor at the dinner of the District of Columbia Business and Professional Women.

And so it goes—teas, dinners, benefits, entertaining guests—but through it all Mrs. Roosevelt remains smiling and gracious, one of America's most interesting First Ladies.

Macaroni and Crab Delight Recipes Are Proposed for Housewives.

AS SOON as the Lenten season gets under way, so many housewives acquire that worried what-to-serve look, thinking that gastronomically, too, the members of the family must suffer because of meatless meals. All this fretting is quite unnecessary, especially since preparing delicious meatless dishes really is a very simple matter. There are innumerable (and what's more, economical) dishes that will satisfactorily fill the meat void, and, at the same time, lend a new and delicious variety to the daily menu.

Cheese, for instance, is one of the oldest foods and an important factor in the meals of people of foreign countries, but it is only in comparatively recent times that American homemakers have come to realize its possibilities in every-day cooking. For years it has been a popular accompaniment to pies, puddings, fruit and crisp crackers; but its use as a meat substitute should not be overlooked because it can be adapted to many appetizing and nutritious combinations for many meals. And there are so many varieties of cheese on the market today (more than 500) that dishes prepared with cheese need never become monotonous.

When a particularly zestful cheese is planned, the strong, tangy cheese will turn the trick, and of the tangy cheese Roquefort is one of the most popular. This cheese, with its dry-cheese flavor, will add an epicurean touch to many dishes and bring forth those flattering second-helping requests every housewife enjoys. Here are some appetite-provoking Lenten dishes:

Macaroni Mousse.

1 cup macaroni broken in 2-inch pieces
1½ cups scalding milk
1 cup soft bread crumbs
¼ cup melted butter
1 pimiento, chopped
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 tablespoon chopped onion
1½ cups Roquefort cheese
⅜ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
Dash paprika
3 eggs

Cook the macaroni in boiling salted water, blanch in cold water and drain. Pour the scalding milk over the bread crumbs; add the butter, pimiento, parsley, onion, crumbled Roquefort cheese and seasonings. Then add the well-beaten eggs. Put the macaroni in a thickly buttered loaf pan and pour the milk and cheese mixture over it. Bake about 50 minutes in a slow oven, 325 degrees F., or until the loaf is firm and will hold its shape when turned over on a platter. Serve with mushroom sauce.

Roquefort Cheese and Crab Delight.

2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon mustard
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash of cayenne pepper
1 cup cooked and strained tomato
1 cup Roquefort cheese
1 egg, slightly beaten
¾ cup milk
1 cup crab meat

Cook green pepper in butter for five minutes, blend in flour; add seasonings, tomatoes, cheese and egg; cook a few minutes. Heat the milk before adding the other ingredients; then add crab meat. Serve on rounds of toast or crackers. Save one tablespoon Roquefort cheese to be sprinkled on top when serving.

Florentine Eggs.

2 cups cooked spinach
½ cup Roquefort cheese
4 eggs
2-3 cup thin white sauce

Place a layer of spinach in bottom of buttered baking dish. Sprinkle with crumbled Roquefort cheese. Place eggs on top of spinach; cover with white sauce; bake in a moderate oven, 375 degrees F., until the cheese is melted and the eggs are set.

Flying Ants in Cloud Over Sugar Loaf Peak

It swirled as if driven by the breeze, and it lay like a smothering smoke pall over the land.

Assistant County Fire Warden Al Weinert saw the cloud from his lookout tower. He flashed an alarm.

Violet Shades Stressed In Paris Style Shows

New York, (AP).—"Watch for purple" is the tip of fashion scouts who saw violet shades stressed at the Paris openings—a semi-mourning color in homage to England's late King.

American stylists predict that eggplant, violet and purple will grow steadily better as summer approaches, and that a high style summer outfit will be a white coat over a purple dress.

Spicy Aroma of Well Made Cup of Tea Chases Gloom of Cold Winter Days

Tea is a beverage for every time of year, but we like its delicate aromatic fragrance particularly during the months when rain and snow make a tete-a-tete a pleasant way to spend a gloomy afternoon. The quality of tea and the method of preparation must be considered if this beverage is to win you renown as a hostess. The accompanying story gives hints on both subjects as well as a delightful new beverage which uses tea as its most important ingredient.

'Different' Recipe Adds Much to Popularity of Beverage.

LET it rain, let it snow—disagreeable weather only adds to the cozy friendliness of a cup of tea, especially when it is the delicious, "different" cinnamon gardens hot spiced tea. The spicy aroma and delightful taste of this beverage will add greatly to your renown as a hostess. Hot spiced tea, served with crisp buttered cookies, is ideal for bridge, informal club meetings, or simply a tete-a-tete.

Serve the spiced tea hot, with a decorative lemon garnish for each cup. Large juicy lemons are the choice of the wise hostess. With the delicate, blended teas that are now so popular, lemon is essential to bring out the flavor. Decorate your lemon slices with cloves for a festive touch and aromatic flavor.

Cinnamon Gardens Hot Spiced Tea.

¾ cup sugar
½ cup water

Dissolve sugar in water and bring to boiling point. Remove from fire. Add:

Juice from 4 lemons
Juice from 1 California orange
¾ teaspoon cinnamon
10 whole cloves

Bring to rapid boil: 5 cups water; pour over 5 heaping teaspoons tea

Let steep for 5 minutes. Strain and add fruit juice and spice mixture. Serve with lemon garnish and accompany with crisp butter cookies.

Tea has the most delicately fascinating aroma of all beverages if it is properly prepared from tea leaves of quality. When buying tea be sure to select well-curled leaves that are free from stems or dust. In preparing tea for marketing, the leaves are withered or steamed and then rolled by hand or machinery. This extracts some of the juice, which dries on the leaf and makes it more easily soluble when the tea is steeped. The twist of the leaf due to this rolling helps to secure this dried juice. Tea with very large leaves, dusty tea or tea in which stems are found in abundance is of poor quality and even though offered at a reduced price is bad economy, as a large quantity must be used to produce even a fair flavor.

There are few rules to be remembered about storing tea. Tea will absorb moisture and odors, and the volitale oil, to which it owes much of its flavor, will evaporate. Store tea, therefore, in tightly covered cans in a cool place.

Authorities on tea making recommend glass or earthenware pots in preference to metal ones, for they feel that metal is to be avoided if the best flavor of the tea is to be preserved.

The tea leaves may be placed in a muslin bag or tea-ball when the boiling water is poured over them. The best tea is made by using freshly drawn water which has been brought to a bubbling boil. First scald your tea pot and then add the tea leaves, usually one rounding teaspoon for every measuring cup of water. Tea which is to be served plain should be steeped for about 3 to 4 minutes. It should be served promptly after steeping for best results. If the tea must stand even a few moments after steeping the specified time, the beverage should be poured into another scalded receptacle to prevent further steepnig.

Care in Following Simple Rules of Preparation Insure Success.

'Meats' Game Gives Impetus To Imagination

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THE Browns have a new table game. Table games are a specialty in the family, for they can be made to include even the youngest, and keep conversation from being one-sided or degenerating into lessons in manners.

The game started when Mr. Brown found that his younger children could not distinguish between the various kinds of meat. Lamb, veal and pork were alike to them, and whether the cut of beef was roast beef, beefsteak or pot roast was also a puzzle.

So every time the family sat down to a meal, each child was required to name the meat before he was served. The children enjoyed this and soon were expert at recognizing kinds and cuts. Then a new sort of question arose. Where did the animal come from?

Today the game is established and has grown farther-reaching as the children have grown older. Everything on the table is the object of investigation. The members of the family vie with each other in finding out where silver, linen, decorations and food come from, and have in many cases gone into the history of their earliest origins. The game has reached out into geography and science and become an added incentive to school work.

Of course the Browns do not play the game every time they are at dinner. Nor has it ever been permitted to become a strain on nerves and brain. Father and mother are not teachers. Often they, too, can be found hunting up some obscure question so that they may not be outdone by the children.

On occasions where conversation languishes, or a discussion seems imminent, or malicious gossip is current, one of the Browns' games is generally suggested to save the day and keep the meal from becoming unpleasantly personal.

150 Students at Oxford Launch Hunger Strike

Oxford, England, March 3 (AP).—A group of 150 Oxford University undergraduates, balking at what they called unappetizing menus, went on a "hunger strike" tonight and refused to enter Pembroke College dining hall.

"It has been quite a common thing for years for men to enter the dining hall and, on seeing the menu, walk out and go to the city for dinner," one of the strikers said.

Others protested that in addition to the poor quality of the food, prices charged for it were too high. They said they paid the equivalent of 50 cents for dinner, plus 2 cents for a roll.

Ruffs Appear As Leavening To Suit Styles

CORAL GABLES, Fla., March 3. (U.P.).—It appeared today that even the most well-behaved girls will be chin deep in ruffs this spring.

As leavening to the masculine trend in tailored suits, mannish top coats and dinner frocks that suggest tuxedos, the ruff is putting in appearance on everything from blouses to evening gowns.

In a fashion show held for charity this afternoon, many of the more interesting frocks for informal day wear had as their only trimming frothy frills of white organdie that foamed up to the chin of the wearer. Blouses for use with smartly tailored flannel suits, the latter in pastel colors for resort wear, and in more subdued shades for Northern spring, were featured by high collars reminiscent of those worn by grandees of another era.

Some of the ruffs gave their wearers' faces the appearance of a flower in the middle of a calyx. But the fashion-wise ones say don't attempt this type of ruff unless you have an "early twenties" face.

Package Maker Helps to Make Home Tasteful

Concerns Now Keep Eyes on Woman User in Carton, Bottle Design.

EASIER living and more tasteful homes for every woman received a healthy boost from the packaging activities of American manufacturers during the past 12 months, according to figures announced with the winners of this year's All-America Package Competition which Modern Packaging magazine sponsors for industry each year.

Competent judges made a side-by-side comparison of nearly 10,000 packages which made their first appearance in 1935, to select the 41 worthy of the gold, silver and bronze awards of the competition.

The judges reported a marked increase in manufacturer's appreciation of the necessity of serving the woman buyer with package design. There was obvious consideration of effective package colors in relation to their appearance on the kitchen shelf or the bathroom cabinet, and many important contributions in the interest of easier use of the contents.

Women Dominant.

"Women have become a dominating influence in the packaging of all merchandise," says Kay Austin, noted shopping columnist who served as one of the judges. "Beauty in a package or eye-appeal is, with women, perhaps the strongest single element of persuasion, unless it be a glib salesman.

"And it is understandable! What is of greater interest to women than clothes—and clothes are really little more than a package for the individual.

"Truly, I believe woman's interest in clothes and packages is similar and manufacturers are certainly accepting the importance of that interest in their consideration of packages for their products."

Had User in Mind.

Certainly, designers had a picture of the women user in mind when they developed a nonslip furniture polish bottle, a squeezable glass tube for cleaning fluid with a stiff bristled brush attached to do the spot-cleaning job in one operation, a garden insecticide carton that pumps, a nondrip medicine bottle with a design that permits a neat black molded cap, a new ingenious pouring spout for soap chips, to name a few that were among the winners.

Designers didn't forget the reuse value of the package, either. A well-known perfumer walked off with one of the awards with a striking black bottle encased in a separate frosted glass container that turned out to be a table cigarette box with an ash tray cover.

Humans, When Tired, React Like Animals

Human beings react like animals when they are tired or under strong emotional stress, Dr. Gregory S. Razran, psychologist of Columbia University, has discovered. During two years of research, Dr. Razran experimented with conditioned reflexes on college boys. The same tests had been used by Pavlov, famous Russian scientist, on dogs.

Dr. Razran explained the effect of fatigue and emotion upon the human mind by pointing out that "a person neither thinks nor reasons then."

New Makeup Saves Husbands Late Shaving

PLUCKED eyebrows and permanent waves for men have been decreed for this spring by the National Beauty Congress which recently met in Seattle.

Ted Carrol, style consultant, told the Associated Press that men wanted beauty service. "They demand style," he said, "so we give it to 'em. They want permanent waves to keep their hair from falling into their eyes.

"As to bald heads, there's nothing doing yet," according to Carrol. "We're still looking for a scalp treatment that will grow hair," he said.

The latest thing for beautifying men is a greaseless makeup that will cover a heavy black beard.

"In case a fellow is dragged off by his wife to an evening social function," Carroll explained, "all he has to do is apply the makeup. As a rule he hates to shave. This saves him time and worry."

The latest thing in feminine hairdressing is a transparent paper coiffure that may be donned like milady's hat. Paper coiffures are tailored to follow the hairline, waved, curled, braided or specially styled to suit the individual. They can be had in any color to harmonize with a woman's gown.

44,000 Voice View in Ideal Marriage Poll

WHAT FACTORS constitute the ideal marriage?

These, according to a national poll on the subject participated in by more than 44,000 voters throughout the country and announced by the Bernarr MacFadden Foundation, are as follows:

1. Marriage at the age of 25 years for the man and 21 years for the woman.
2. Children (either two or three).
3. Religious unity of husband and wife.
4. A husband with ambition, devotion and affection, and a good disposition; a wife who is neat, devoted and affectionate and loyal.
5. Maintenance of outside social relations.
6. A home independent of relatives or in-laws.
7. Care in personal appearance of husband and wife.
8. Good meals and an attractive home.
9. A nonwage-earning wife.
10. Financial security.
11. Noninterference by the wife in the husband's business affairs.

Other interesting data revealed by the poll, as affecting happy and successful marriage, shows 64 per cent of the vote favoring extension of birth control knowledge; 92 per cent favoring religious training for children; 63 per cent opposed to more liberal divorce laws; 91 per cent indicating their belief that marriage helps a man's ambition in "getting ahead," and a slight majority of 51 per cent voting that repeal of prohibition has had a "bad" effect on happy marriage.

A similar adverse effect—by a vote of 84 per cent—is indicated with respect to the influence of the present economic depression on marriage.

Post Food Editor Sails Today To Report on Bermuda Cuisine

Dorothea Duncan, Winner of National Contest for Original Oyster Recipes, Will Investigate Typical Tropical and British Menus for Washington Housewives.

"OH, TO BE IN BERMUDA now that Easter's near," sighs the housewife who is tied to a three-meal-a-day schedule with a hungry husband home at 6:30.

However, there are alternatives to going to Bermuda. One is to inject some Bermuda atmosphere into the daily menu. And help in doing this will be provided readers of The Post's food pages by Miss Dorothea Duncan, home economics editor of The Post, who is sailing today for a vacation in Bermuda.

Miss Duncan was awarded a two-week trip to Bermuda as first prize in a national contest for original oyster recipes sponsored by the Oyster Institute of North America. The contest was open to food editors of newspapers and magazines.

On her trip Miss Duncan will investigate Bermudan food traditions. For instance, everyone knows that Bermuda is famed for its onions. But do Bermudans actually eat onions? If so, how do they prepare them? Then there are the famous Bermuda potatoes. Do Bermuda chefs and housewives have any new ways for dressing up the homely potato? Also, how do Bermudans serve their bananas? Raw, boiled or fried? And what fish do they eat and how?

Miss Duncan will not only run down the answers to these questions, but she will also investigate English food and recipes. Sailing on an English boat, the Queen, she will find out how mutton and roast beef are cooked as only English boat chefs can cook them, and how real English pound cake is made. British cooks are noted for their special ways of preparing vegetables and Miss Duncan will find out how they make their famous "Bubble and Squeak," a mixture of fresh vegetables which is especially stimulating to jaded spring appetites.

Miss Duncan will arrive in Bermuda Friday and will be there nine days. Watch for her food articles on her return.

Stock-Taking Of Preserves Advised Now

Marmalade Easy to Make; Four Recipes Are Suggested.

NOW IS THE time for every good housekeeper to take stock of her pantry shelves and start replenishment. Winter appetites have undoubtedly drained the supply of preserves, and few fresh fruits are yet in season.

Oranges, however, are at their best during this time of the year, not only for service as fresh fruit and in juice form, but also for making marmalade. At this time California naval oranges are plentiful, and are unsurpassed for this healthful and popular sweet.

Modern cookery methods have shortened and improved the tedious methods of making marmalade formerly employed, so that grandmother's recipes—necessitating three or four days for completion—are no longer in vogue. Here are four variations which are highly recommended; one, a bitter marmalade similar to the English variety; a newly tested and shortened method for preparing a fairly sweet marmalade, such as is generally popular in this country; an orange cranberry marmalade; and a three fruit recipe, moderately sweet.

Bitter Orange Marmalade.

(Makes 6 to 8 glasses).

1 grapefruit
2 oranges
1 lemon
¼ cup lemon juice

Slice unpeeled fruit very thin. Add three times as much water as fruit. Boil 20 minutes. Measure. Bring to boiling point. Add ¾ cup sugar for each cup of fruit. Boil 25 minutes or until it gives the jelly test. Just before removing from fire add ¼ cup lemon juice. Pour into sterilized jars; cover with paraffin when cold.

Orange Marmalade

(Makes 12 to 8 glasses).

Slice 4 medium or 3 large, unpeeled oranges and 4 unpeeled lemons very thin. Measure and add five times as much cold water; boil hard for 50 to 60 minutes. This should reduce quantity one-half. Measure into 2 or 3 lots. For rather sweet oranges, add additional lemon juice at this stage—about 1 tablespoon to 1 cup fruit. Bring to boiling point. Boil 8 minutes. Add ¾ cuy sugar for 1 cup fruit. Boil rapidly until it gives jelly test of thick, reluctant drops from side of spoon—15 to 25 minutes. Pour into sterilized glasses. Cover with paraffin when cold.

Causes for variation: Sweetness or tartness of fruit and degree of ripeness cause variation. Fruit is richer in pectin when first ripe, needs less cooking and will, therefore, produce the maximum number of glasses. Variations in clearness of product are due chiefly to this fact. The shorter the cooking time, the clearer and more delicate the jelly.

Recooking of marmalade tends to darken and to make flavor strong. If it does not quite jelly on first cooking, stand in sunshine, without paraffin for 24 to 36 hours.

Orange Cranberry Marmalade.

(Makes about 16 glasses.)

Make cranberry jam as follows: To 1 quart of cranberries add just enough water to float fruit. Cook covered until all berries have popped. Rub all or nearly all through a coarse strainer. Return to fire. Sweeten to taste. (This will take about ¾ cup sugar to 1 cup of pulp.)

Cook until mixture gives the jelly test (about 10 to 15 minutes).

3-Fruit Marmalade.

(Makes 12 to 18 glasses.)

3 oranges
1 grapefruit
1 lemon

Slice unpeeled fruit very thin. Add three times as much cold water as fruit. Any time during the next 24 hours boil hard for 45 minutes. This should reduce the quantity about one-half. Replace liquid boiled away with water. Measure into two or three lots. Bring to boiling point. Add ¾ cup sugar for each cup of fruit. Boil rapidly 10 to 20 minutes, until it gives the jelly test of thick, reluctant drops from side of spoon. For a pleasing tartness add 1 tablespoon lemon juice for each cup of fruit. Boil 1 to 2 minutes longer. Pour into sterilized jars and cover with paraffin when cold.

Marmalade Goes Highbrow

U. S. Bureau of Home Economics.

Now is the best time in the year in which to stock your pantry shelves with citrus fruit marmalades, for oranges, lemons and grapefruit are at their peak of perfection and as inexpensive as they will ever be. If you remember marmalade as being a confection that is difficult to make, revise your ideas by reading the following up-to-date recipes.

Paris Will Revive Lace as Trimming

Formal Gowns for Spring Reflect Trend.

Paris (U.P.).—There will be a revival of the lace vogue in Paris this spring, with a generous use of lace as trimming as well as whole gowns for formal occasions being fashioned out of lacy materials.

Black lace always has been a popular choice with distinguished Parisians, but for spring and summer wear the lighter pastel colors will be more popular. Dusty pinks, mauves, pale blues and soft greens promise to be best shades for summer evening gowns of linen and cotton lace.

Brown Goes Rusty.

Paris (AP).—Rusty browns have made their appearance in several advance spring fashions. They are seen in both kid and suede shoes, in prints for spring frocks and in suede handbags.

Minimum Wage Act for Women Is Held Illegal

New York Tribunal Leaves Way Open for Appeal to Supreme Court.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., March 3.—New York State's highest tribunal—the Court of Appeals—bound itself today to precedent of the United States Supreme Court and held unconstitutional the State labor law setting up minimum wages for women.

The division was four to three.

The Court of Appeals based its decision on a ruling by the United States Supreme Court that the 1918 Federal minimum wage law was unconstitutional because it violated the right of a citizen to make contracts.

The State court held that the New York State minimum wage law for women passed in 1933, violated the same principle in both the State and Federal constitutions.

The dissenting judges also held that changing conditions in the last decade may have convinced the Supreme Court of original error.

Attorney General John J. Bennett, jr., announced at once that the State of New York would appeal the case.

Ezekiel Speaker On Birth Control

The Nation's population will reach its maximum by the middle of the present century, Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture, yesterday told the Birth Control Tuesday luncheon at the Women's City Club.

"The whole economy of the country," he said, "has been founded upon a rapidly growing population. With a stable population there would be a relatively smaller demand in capital goods. Instead, we would have to readjust our whole economic life in terms of higher standards of living for the people we have."

The group is pressing for the enactment of the Copeland-Gassaway birth control bill now before Congress. This bill would place the entire subject in the hands of the medical profession, thus promoting proper child-spacing and the resultant improvements in maternal and child welfare.

Mrs. Hewitt's Recovery Uncertain, Doctor Says

Jersey City, N. J., March 3 (AP). Dr. William M. Doody, her physician, said tonight there is a possibility that Mrs. Maryon Cooper Hewitt may not recover from the illness confining her to the Medical Center.

He said there appeared to be "no danger" Mrs. Hewitt, accused by her daughter, Ann, of plotting to have her sterilized, would die immediately, "but there is a possibility that she won't get well."

Mrs. Hewitt, said by the physician to be suffering from an intestinal disturbance and a "bad" heart, was given a "50-50" chance by the doctor to get better. She was admitted to the hospital suffering from what police said was an overdose of sedative taken with suicidal intent.

Texas CCC Work Yields Traces of Ancient Man

Prehistoric man once roamed the plains and forests of Texas, Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, announced yesterday.

Traces of his existence have been discovered in Longhorn Caverns State Park, near Burnet, in the Lone Star State, by Dr. Charles N. Gould, Park Service geologist, who has been studying geologic formations in connection with CCC work. These finds include arrow points, metates, and numerous bones of animals, which had been split, evidently for the purpose of extracting marrow.

"Longhorn Caverns bear every evidence that they once served as shelters and probably as homes for prehistoric man," said Dr. Gould.

7 Army Chiefs Quit Japanese Council of War

2 Mentioned for Premier Included; Blame Selves for Military Coup.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, March 3.—Seven leaders of the Japanese army, including two mentioned as the possible next premier, tendered their resignations tonight from the supreme war council because they felt indirectly responsible for last Wednesday's bloody military coup.

In an unprecedented situation, the seven generals asked Gen. Yoshiyuki Kawashima, minister of war, to submit their joint resignations to Emperor Hirohito tomorrow. This he is expected to do.

The army leaders explained they felt responsible for conditions in the army which had made the revolt possible. About 1,000 troops, led by 24 officers, assassinated four government officials and for four days refused to surrender government buildings in the heart of Tokyo.

The generals were Senjuro Hayashi and Sadao Araki, both mentioned as possibilities for premier; Nobuyuki Abe, Jinzaburo Mazaki, Giichi Nishi, Kenkichi Uyeda and Count Juichi Terauchi.

If the resignations are accepted only the four Imperial Princes, Kanin, Nashimoto, Higashikuni and Asaka, will be left on the war council.

Mazaki and Araki are firm Nationalists, while gens Hayashi, Uyeda and Abe are known as Moderates.

Indicating its confidence that normalcy has been restored, the government today withdrew the first fleet from Tokyo Bay, where it had been called during the height of last week's trouble.

Tokyo, however, remained under martial law and troops were still occupying strategic positions.

No decision has been made by Imperial and government leaders upon a premier to succeed Keisuke Okada.

Air Limits Planes To 575-Mile Speed

New York, March 3 (AP).—A discovery that air itself bars present airplane forms from speeding faster than about 575 miles per hour was described tonight to a group of scientists.

The phenomenon also was shown as "the villain" in a unique motion picture of what happens when air zips past at the speed of sound. Possible death was said to await the pilot who dares the maximum.

Before an audience in the museum of science and industry, Dr. George W. Lewis, research director of the national advisory committee for aeronautics, described how air streaming past a wing or propeller tip at 800 miles per hour may build a "compressibility burble."

The burble is an area of excessively compressed air created by the aerfoil's passing. The smooth flow over the wing top breaks, at speeds of about 575 miles per hour or higher, into a feathery "shock wave," robbing the plane of lifting power and checking its forward motion.

an influence of authority in international affairs, which are alike required for defense of vital British interests and application of the policy of collective security," the paper said.

Amid the government's admission that general disarmament has failed and that future naval limitation will be meager, conferees of the four-power naval conference hastily settled most of their differences and arranged to conclude the parley next week.

Britain, the United States and France probably will arrange a tripower treaty to which Italy and Japan can adhere if they wish. Britain hopes to conclude separate similar treaties with Russia and Germany. France was reported to have yielded to American demands for a 35,000-ton maximum on battleships.

Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin will appoint a new cabinet minister to supervise and co-ordinate the huge rearmament program as deputy chairman of the imperial defense committees.

Concedes Collapse.

Conceding the virtual collapse of naval negotiations, the government said "what will remain of this limitation after the conclusion of the present naval conference is not yet certain, but it would seem likely an agreement will not extend beyond advance notification of annual programs, an exchange of information and certain measures for qualitative limitation on sizes of ships and their guns."

The white paper referred to rearmament programs in Europe, Japan and the United States, asserting the latter had increased defense appropriations from £108,000,000 in 1933-34 to £180,000,000 in 1935-36.

Parliament will debate the white paper next week.

communications break was due to a telegraphic wire failure, but they were not optimistic. The mission station there, comprising a hospital and several schools, is the largest in China outside Peiping.

Marshal Yen Hsi-Shan was reported in dispatches from Taiyuan to have ordered his main force to meet the red army of 10,000, said to be within 90 miles of the provincial capital.

(The American board of commissioners for foreign missions in Boston said 35 Americans, including 10 children, apparently were in the path of the Communist march. Officials of the board expressed concern as they had no word from Fenchow.)

Missionaries Involved.

(A similar board in New York said there were 22 American missionaries who might be involved, including Dr. Leonard Wilbur, son of Federal Judge Curits D. Wilbur and a nephew of Ray Lyman Wilbur, prseident of Stanford University.)

In connection with the Sino-Japanese situation, a Nanking dispatch said military officials of the Chinese government disclosed that a plan for compulsory military training is to be introduced by stages in China.

Nation-wide conscription was approved in principle by the Nanking government three years ago.

The training will be tried experimentally at first among government employes and, if practical, later will be extended to all men between the ages of 18 and 45.

Americans in Danger.

Boston, March 3 (AP).—Thirty-five young Americans, including ten children—one a wek-old baby—apparently were in the path of Chinese Communists advancing through Shansi Province, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions said today.

The group consisted of missionaries, teachers and their families stationed at Fenchow, westernmost missionary outpost of the American board, 300 miles from Peiping, and another group at Taiku, 50 miles away.

Officials of the board, which conducts foreign missionary activities for the Congregational and Christian Churches, said they had no word from their representatives at Fenchow, and expressed concern.

The board conducts a hospital at Fenchow with a staff of more than 40 white and Chinese doctors, nurses and student nurses, and the schools with approximately 35 teachers and more than 500 students.

The list of Americans at Fenchow, made public by the American board today, included:

Edward VIII May Wed Ex-Princess of Spain

Madrid, March 3 (AP).—The newspaper Ya in a dispatch from Paris today hinted strongly of a marriage between King Edward VIII of Great Britain and the Infanta Maria Christina, 25-year-old daughter of former King Alfonso XIII of Spain.

The dispatch quoted "monarchists residing in Paris" as saying Edward had "already selected the mate who will share the throne with him and when the selection is announced it will be a real sensation in Spain."

London, March 3 (AP).—It was authoritatively stated tonight that a marriage between King Edward and the former Infanta Maria Christina, of Spain, hinted at by a Spanish newspaper, is "impossible" under a British law whereby the King cannot wed a Catholic.

It was pointed out that even if such an obstacle did not exist, the British would object to an alliance with a family afflicted by hemophelia.

Mussolini Bids For Friendship, Praises U.S. Aid

Congress Served Cause of World Peace in Avoiding Oil Ban, Duce Says.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Rome, March 3.—Premier Benito Mussolini today bid for United States friendship, to help Italy through the "economic siege of Geneva" and the Ethiopian war.

Il Duce praised Washington for refusing to follow the lead of European nations, in attempting economic strangulation of the Fascist state to end the Italo-Ethiopian war, which he described as "serving the cause of human civilization."

In his lengthy declaration to the cabinet, Mussolini sounded a note of defense to the world, and moved swiftly to strengthen Italy's position against sanctions by:

1. Tightening the government's grip on all financial institutions, through establishment of a central control bureau.

2. Arranging a conference with leading Austrian and Hungarian statesmen, presumably to increase Italy's influence in Central Europe.

"Worked for Peace."

Il Duce told his cabinet officers that the American Congress "worked for peace" when it extended neutrality legislation, without adopting new and more severe measures.

"As Italians, we cannot but acknowledge with satisfaction the political policy of the United States," Mussolini said.

"I also wish to add that the American Representatives and Senators who avoided an embargo on oil and other raw materials have, above all, rendered a precious service to the cause of world peace.

"We have reached the fourth month of the siege, and the Italian people have further strengthened their political and moral structure. These mournings of war are supported with a manly courage, such as demands world admiration.

"The Italian people understand and feel the historic importance of this effort which the nation is accomplishing, not only to avenge those who died in 1895 and 1896, but to guarantee itself a road to the future.

"Italy today is serving the cause of human civilization. Everywhere in Italy work is progressing, in order to reach the maximum degree of economic autonomy, without which any nation may be raped tomorrow by the arrogance of wealthier nations."

Banking Legislation.

Today's banking legislation, officials explained, is aimed chiefly at defense of deposits, and to regulate credit operations. It was denied officially that creation of the control bureau will abolish private banking, as reported abroad.

A large part of the normal banking staffs will be eliminated, bankers said. Only the Bank of Italy will be represented on the committee governing bank operations. The effect of the decree was described as "changing the banks from stock companies to semi-state organizations."

Dope Charge Holds 2 in $10,000 Bond

Two men, arrested yesterday in connection with alleged violations of the narcotics act, were arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage yesterday and held under $10,000 bond each.

A woman in the case was released by the commissioner. With the trio at the time of their arrest was a 7-year-old boy, believed to have been used as a "blind."

At the time of the arrests police closed in on a luxurious limousine, fitted with secret panels and a device to dump contraband.

Berlin, March 3 (AP).—A group of 25 former socialists and communists, including several artists and writers, were deprived of German citizenship today and their property was confiscated because "their activities damaged German interests."

Among the expatriates, most of them Jews, are Arnold Zweig, the well known writer; Herbert Stahl, who under the pen-name of "Steel" is accused of writing a "direct atrocity campaign against Nazi Germany;" and Erich Wollenberg, former Communist member of the Reichstag.

Italians Smash Last Resistance On North Front

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Italian General Headquarters, Northern Ethiopia, March 3.—Adding thousands of Ethiopian dead to last week's casualty lists, Italian armies today smashed the backbone of Ethiopian resistance.

In the north, Marshal Pietro Badoglio's columns, after days of merciless aerial and artillery bombardment, occupied Abbi Addi, capital of Tembien.

Hundreds of bombing planes roared over piles of burning Ethiopian dead, pursuing the last remnants of the teeming primitive armies mustered to keep Emperor Haile Selassie "proud and free upon his native mountains."

In the south, Gen. Rodolpho Graziani sent his "hell on wheels" columns into action to smash the troops of the Dajazmatch Nasibu, governor of Harar Province, and duplicate Badoglio's slaughter in the north.

While triumphant Italians swept into Ras Kassa's palace at Abbi Addi, another force to the west, ending a battle which began Saturday, routed troops of Ras Imru, last resisting Ethiopian commander of the northern front.

Ras Imru's men resisted so strongly that their losses were heavy. Italians assert their losses are surprisingly low. To defeat and rout Ras Imru, the Italian Fourth army corps joined forces with the Second army corps, making Black Shirt victory in the north complete.

Occupation of Abbi Addi was achieved by the Third army corps and the native Eritrean army corps, which joined forces.

Airplanes reconnoitering in Tembien today reported remnants of Ras Kassa's army in full flight, many having thrown away their guns in an effort to look like simple peasant folk.

Gen. Graziani's aviation units in the south bombed an Ethiopian column marching across the Fanfan Valley between Daggah Bur and Daggah Medo.

The Ethiopians returned the attack with rifle fire, but were forced to disperse, leaving large numbers of dead and wounded.

Other Italian Somaliland airplanes, operating from 60 bases, are constantly bombing all areas in advance of Italian troops or outposts.

Employe Coercion Laid to Steel Firm

Pittsburgh, March 3 (AP).—Stories of alleged coercion, police surveillance, beating of union organizers and intimidation of mill workers were placed in the record today before the National Labor Relations Board ended its two-day hearing of charges the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation violated the Wagner Labor Law.

Chairman J. Warren Madden, of the board, announced he will receive supplemental documentary evidence later in Washington before announcing a decision in the case, which is expected to be carried to the Supreme Court as a test of the Wagner act's constitutionality.

Evidence today was a one-sided affair because attorney Earl F. Reed and associate counsel for the steel firm withdrew after charging the board lacked jurisdiction.

Bitter House Battle Nears On Sisson Bill

Red Repeal to Be Reported Soon; Hearings Are Published.

Transcript Expected to Be Used By Blanton As His Defense.

A bitter House battle on the Sisson bill to repeal the law forbidding the mention of Communism in local schools was forecast yesterday with the publication of the hearings on the pending District supply measure. The "red rider" repeal bill, now in committee, is expected to be reported out soon.

More than one-third of the 787-page transcript of the hearing of the sub-committee headed by Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Texas, was given over to the rider, to allegedly "communistic and subversive" textbooks and periodicals, and to "the horrible facts of communism" as seen by proponents of the rider.

Ostensibly this section of the hearings was devoted to the appropriation for the character education program, which the committee discontinued.

However, the pages and pages of testimony in favor of the rider, and the hours of cross-questioning spent by Blanton and other committee members in a vain effort to get Superintendent of Schools Dr. Frank Ballou to admit responsibility for the so-called "radical" opinions was seen as an indication that the transcript of the hearings was to serve Blanton as a defense against an anticipated favorable report from the sub-committee on education, now holding hearings on the Sisson bill.

Funds Loss Not Unexpected.

Elimination of funds for character education was not entirely unexpected, as the sub-committee did the same thing last year, only to agree to their reinstatement in conference in exchange for Senate approval of the antired rider.

That considerable opposition will be aroused in the Senate to any such compromise was indicated by the fact that opponents of the rider rushed their plans to introduce a bill similar to the Sisson bill into the Senate this week.

When the bill is reported to the floor later this month, as is generally conceded likely even by opponents of the "rider," Representative Blanton is expected to lead the floor fight against it.

Through questioning of Dr. Ballou and other school officials, Blanton sought to establish that Dr. Ballou, as secretary of the Social Studies Commission was responsible for opinions contained in the commission's report despite his refusal to sign it, and that the character education program was a direct outcome of this commission's report and an embodiment of the principles of "positive" and "collectivistic" education which it advocated.

Blanton Accused Ballou.

Blanton bluntly accused Dr. Ballou of refusing to sign the report, simply to prevent being removed from office. Ballou denied the charge.

Typical of the cross-examination that Ballou was subjected to by Blanton, with Representative Johnson, of West Virginia, joining in, revealed in the record was:

Blanton—I would like to preface my question with the statement that I deem you one of the smartest and brightest men that I have ever seen in school life. Being that, doctor, you knew that if you ever signed this report along with Counts and Beard and subscribed to the statements that they put down there in black and white, you knew that it would be impossible for you to continue holding your position as superintendent of schools, didn't you?

Ballou—No, I did not consider my position in the matter at all.

Johnson—Doctor . . . down on the floor of the House we have lots of members who do not know which way to go, and they do not vote. They just simply say "present." Now why didn't you say in that prospectus there that the four who did not sign dissented.

Ballou—Because I did not have anything to do with the preparation of that statement.

The transcript further revealed that Representative Blanton had proposed a "gentlemen's agreement" to Dr. Ballou to withdraw the requirement of an oath on the part of the teacher every pay day.

Five administrative positions, carrying salaries amounting to $11,925, were disallowed. These were the conversions of principalships at Syphax and Shepherd schools, an assistant superintendent, an assistant principal at Roosevelt High School and an assistant superintendent for character education.

Besides disallowing $17,460 for 12 clerks engaged in character education, the sub-committee disapproved 5 other clerks and cut $141,400 from the item for teachers and librarians. Of this latter, $56,800 was for character education personnel; $36,600 for teachers to relieve congestion in schools, $2,000 for an assistant to director of health and physical education and $46,000 to savings through appointment of teachers at minimum of grade.

The sub-committee cut $5,820 from the Budget Bureau's estimates for vocational and night schools; saved $5,528 by denying two laborers to the Anacostia High School and three additional mechanics to be placed on a full-time basis, and reduced by $25,000 the fund for fuel, light and power.

Justifying the $353,500 for Eastern High School, the sub-committee pointed out that the school is now operating on a platoon program with half the pupils attending only morning classes and half afternoon sessions. The enrollment is 3,000, while the school's capacity is 2,100.

Economy in District Begins With These

Post Staff Photos.

Here are the real sufferers if the drastically slashed appropriations for Tuberculosis Hospital and the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium become law. In the upper picture are a few of the women patients in the former institution, the allotment for which was cut $20,500 below the figure approved by the Budget Bureau. The hospital, it is provided, shall be closed next January 1, aggravating the present shortage of beds for tuberculosis patients. Lower photo shows Robert and William Sherry, twins, and Stafford H. Cassell, recreation director of the children's sanatorium. Their allotment was cut $10,020 despite pleas that "economy" will jeopardize the youngsters' welfare.

D. C. Budget

$5,000 to $3,500, and others were reduced proportionally.

Although the committee has no hand in the primary consideration of legislation, the sub-committee devoted approximately one-third of the hearing to matters which had no direct bearing on the budget problems in hand.

250 Pages on Communism.

A whole section, covering about 250 printed pages, was devoted to charges of communism in the public schools and textbooks. Scores of pages were taken up with irrelevant matters, such as the sale of The Washington Post, the whole taxation system of the State of Oklahoma, and the tax payments of scores of prominent residents of the

The sub-committee in its questioning apparently exerted every effort to force the District Commissioners into approving the famed Mapes bills to impose new taxes on Washingtonians, but the Commissioners held their ground that the extra taxes are unnecessary.

Attempting to justify the slash in the Federal lump-sum payment, the sub-committee had this to say regarding the District tax rate in its report:

"With the existing low tax rate of only $1.50 per $100 upon a decreased assessment value; with a gasoline tax of only 2 cents on the gallon; with an annual registration and license tag tax of only $1 on each car and truck regardless of make or value; with a low water charge of only $6.60 per year per average family; with all libraries and family wearing apparel, regardless of value, exempt from taxes; with each family allowed an exemption of $1,000 of household furniture; with all trees in front of residences furnished, sprayed, pruned and replaced without charge therefor; with no income tax, no estate tax, no gift tax, no inheritance tax, no sales tax, no special school tax; with a tax of only one-half of 1 per cent on intangibles; with many millions of dollars of intangibles in lock-boxes not now reached upon which no tax is paid until wills are filed after death disclosing same; with no charge for sewer service after once installed; with no charge on abutting property owners for repaving streets and sidewalks in front of their property, and many other advantages enjoyed by citizens of the District of Columbia, by reason of Government institutions being maintained in Washington, which the citizens of the States do not possess, the sub-committee having this bill in charge was unanimous in recommending the reduction of the annual Federal contribution.

Holds Taxes Low.

"The admitted evidence of the District Commissioners before the committee has convinced it that the local residents of the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this bill, will pay less taxes on their property, respectively, than the people elsewhere pay in any other city of comparable size anywhere in the United States."

Other major changes made in the District budget by the sub-committee follow:

Schools: Increase of $113,027 above budget estimates, accounted for by addition of $353,000 for expansion of Eastern High School, reductions in other divisions and elimination of character education supplying the difference.

Police: $16,660 less than the Budget Bureau's estimates. Increase of $10,700 allowed for automatic promotions, but $9,100 disallowed for establishment of three officers' posts in Women's Bureau. Requests for ten additional motorcycle policemen and five clerks denied. Special equipment authorized as recommended by the bureau.

Fire Department: Given $44,500 more than budget estimates for additional equipment to replace obsolete apparatus. The equipment consists of two more aerial hook-and-ladder trucks, or a total of three; an additional combination hose wagon, above the three allowed by the Budget Bureau, and a second pumping engine. The total appropriation for new apparatus is thus $92,000.

Welfare Reduced.

Public welfare—Cut $248,035 below bureau's estimates. This includes reductions for workhouse and reformatory, medical charities, the Tuberculosis Hospital, the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium, Gallinger Municipal Hospital and unemployment relief administration.

Public Utilities Commission—Reduced $8,000 and denied three new positions approved by the Budget Bureau.

Alcoholic Beverage Control Board—Denied $500 for the purchase of sample spirits to detect bootleg liquors.

Smoke regulation—Allowed one smoke regulation engineer, two smoke inspectors and one clerk for new agency.

Building inspection division—Cut $7,500 and denied three new jobs; elevator inspector added.

Plumbing inspection division—Disallowed three new inspectors approved by the bureau.

Surveyor's office—Cut $6,740 and refused funds for assistant engineer, two field aids and two apprentices. Recommended increase in fees.

Department of vehicles and traffic—Reduced $5,040 and denied four additional clerks.

Five Jobs Disallowed.

Contingent and miscellaneous expenses—Cut $11,947 and disallowed one job, new ambulance, two passenger cars, two station wagons and maintenance of four other cars.

Public Library — $2,000 slashed off estimates; disallowed junior librarian.

Street and road repairs—Increased $246,200. Sub-committee added $250,000 to start replacement of Chain Bridge, with an ultimate cost of $350,000; approved $25,000 for engineering surveys preparatory to replacing the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge over Anacostia River.

Refuse department—Slashed $25,000 off estimated cost of operating incinerators.

Electrical department—Cut $22,200 and disallowed three new jobs. Slashed funds for street lighting $15,000.

Courts—Juvenile Court cut $3,440 and refused two probation officers and one clerk. Police Court reduced $6,220 and eliminated two social workers. Municipal Court and Supreme Court left at budget figure. Court of Appeals cut $6,300 by eliminating five messengers; provides for five law clerks with funds carried in 1936 supplemental appropriations act. Slashed $25,000 off miscellaneous expenses.

Water service—$35,000 for storage tank in Fort Dupont Park eliminated. Budget estimates for construction of water main from Third and E streets southwest to Fifth and M streets southeast allowed.

Ruffin Calls Health Slash 'Outrageous'

Tuberculosis Hospital Appropriation Cut By $20,500.

By Gerald G. Gross.

"I think it is outrageous."

The words are Dr. Sterling Ruffin's, spoken yesterday after he heard what the Blanton sub-committee on District appropriations had done to public health and hospital items in the 1937 supply bill.

Dr. Ruffin is president of the District Medical Society and chairman of the civic committee organized last month to petition the Commissioners, the Budget Bureau and Congress for ample funds to protect the Capital's half million inhabitants against disease and properly care for the thousands of patients accommodated annually in municipal hospitals.

The bill, as reported yesterday to the House by the Appropriations Committee, contains the following provisions:

Reduces the skeletonized estimates for the Health Department by $23,800 in comparison with the appropriation recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Health Officer George C. Ruhland, hewing strictly to the line of economy, originally asked $605,000. Now the appropriation stands at $484,170.

Reduces by $20,500 the appropriation for the Upshur Street Tuberculosis Hospital and the new adult sanatorium at Glenn Dale, Md., and ignores public appeal that the former be kept in operation after the latter is completed.

Reduces by $10,020 the allotment for the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Glenn Dale, disallowing the recommendations for domestic attendants to care for children.

Reduces by $5,040 the allotment for Gallinger Hospital, which means that "sweatshop" condition now prevailing are sanctioned for one more fiscal year.

Despite the increase in tuberculosis and venereal disease, the Health Department gets $3,420 below the Budget Bureau's estimates for its two special clinics. Maintenance of its laboratories, widely condemned for their antiquated equipment and inadequate staff, is cut to $1,800, which is slightly over half the figure recommended by the Budget Bureau. With every public school child in the District involved, the hygiene and sanitation fund is reduced $13,240.

Economies Outlined.

The Washington Post, in its campaign for correction of the deplorable public health situation, has pointed out how the establishment of a paid social service at Gallinger Hospital would effect economies by reducing the number of "repeater" patients. But the Blanton subcommittee eliminated the $2,600 item, which would have introduced a social service department to Gallinger.

"The committee has given serious consideration to the need for continuing the old Tuberculosis Hospital (Upshur street) after next January, 1937, and approached the matter in a somewhat favorable attitude," the report accompanying the bill says.

"The information which it secured during the hearings, however, made approval of such a program unjustifiable, and convinced the committee that the President's budget relating thereto is adequate and proper."

The report, however, does not explain why the subcommittee refused to accept information volunteered by the private medical profession and laymen concerned with tuberculosis control.

It is unnecessary to mention that the 1937 supply bill, as it now stands, condones the notorious 12-hour "stretch" for Gallinger nurses which has sent many of them into tuberculosis sanatoria; bed congestion at Gallinger and Tuberculosis hospitals which, according to medical authorities, is a peril to human life; lack of laboratory equipment that makes a mockery of specimen examinations upon which a child's life may depend.

These and numerous other striking shortcomings in the public health system have been cited in earlier stories in The Post.

PWA Worker, Father of Seven, Is Jailed in False Alarm Case

Man Says He Sought to Aid Injured Woman; Judge Delays Sentencing as Assigned Attorney Files Motion for a New Trial.

Stephen Russell, a 37-year-old PWA laborer, father of seven children ranging in age from 3 to 11, was in the District Jail last night because he turned in a false fire alarm.

He was found guilty of the charge by Police Court Judge Isaac R. Hitt.

Judge Hitt took the sentence under advisement until Saturday, when a motion for a new trial will be argued. He required, however, that Russell put up a bond of $500 or go to jail. The laborer could not raise the bond.

John McGinnis, who was in Police Court yesterday when the case came up, was assigned as Russell's attorney. He said Russell, after leaving his work Monday, joined some friends in a party at Fourth and N streets southwest.

"There was some drinking," McGinnis said, "and a brawl started. A lamp was knocked over, and a woman was knocked unconscious. Russell ran out to get the Fire Rescue Squad."

McGinnis pointed out that, in Russell's trial yesterday, no one from the Fire Marshal's office testified that the glass on the alarm box was broken or that the apparatus actually responded.

"I am filing a motion for a new trial for Russell," McGinnis said. "If that fails, I am going to ask that he be placed on probation. Certainly he, the father of seven children, deserves that much in view of what happened to those lads who were accused of turning in 29 alarms."

McGinnis referred to the case of Adams Martin Wyant, son of the late Representative Wyant, of Pennsylvania, and Waldon W. Whitehead, who were accused by police of turning in 29 false alarms January 24. The youths agreed to plead guilty to seven counts. Judge Hitt fined the boys $40 on one count and suspended the sentence. Their personal bond was taken on the other charges.

When Russell was arraigned yesterday he pleaded guilty. Judge Hitt decided not to accept the plea. He appointed McGinnis as an attorney, and McGinnis immediately changed the plea to not guilty.

$2,200,000 City Deficit Likely, Donovan Says

Tells Commissioners D. C. Surplus Is Insufficient to Meet Supply Bill.

The 1937 District budget measure reported to the House yesterday by the Blanton sub-committee will result in a deficit of $2,200,000 at the end of the next fiscal year unless there is an increase in taxes, Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, reported to the Commissioners at a special meeting yesterday.

The meeting was hurriedly called as the startled District heads tried to assay the measure and the effect of the increase in Budget Bureau estimates for some items and the drastic slash proposed in the Federal appropriation of $2,700,000.

The end of the 1935 fiscal year found the District with a surplus of $5,250,000 in its general fund. Allowing $450,000 for estimated deficiency needs of various public welfare and other District agencies during the current year, Maj. Donovan has estimated the city would end this fiscal year with an unpledged balance of $3,877,000.

Relief Upsets Figures.

That calculation, however, was upset by the recent request for a supplemental appropriation of $606,000 for relief during the remainder of the year and some other items, which had not been foreseen to the exact amount. Of the $450,000 allowed for, $100,000 was for expenses incident to the unemployment compensation law.

Estimated revenues, under present taxes, for next year total $30,820,000. Maj. Donovan told the Commissioners. To this amount should be added the proposed $2,700,000 Federal appropriation proposed by the House District Appropriations sub-committee. This total will fall short of estimated income by something like $5,072,000 next year.

Part of this deficit is to be made up by the surplus which remains from the current fiscal year but the net result will be a deficit unless taxes are increased or provisions of the bill are changed. Maj. Donovan told the Commissioners.

Comment Reserved.

The Commissioners were reserved in their comment. Commissioner George E. Allen said they had decided to seek to have injustices in the measure removed in the Senate.

Col. Dan I. Sultan said he was deeply concerned over the proposal to cut the Federal appropriation, but some items in the bill pleased him.

"I'm mighty glad to see the committee put in a provision for our small courts bill," Col. Sultan said. "The provision for Eastern High School, too, will be helpful. It will enable us to get rid of some inadequate stairways. I am glad, too, about the provision for Chain Bridge. That will help us start solution of a problem. Beyond that I can offer no comment because I haven't had time to study the measure in detail."

Commissioners Hazen and Allen also said they wanted time to study details.

Father Stricken By Heart Attack Is Saved by Son

Stephen La Scola's son is an assistant chief in the Takoma Park, Md., fire department, and to that circumstance La Scola probably owes his life.

La Scola, 63, owner of a grocery, was stricken with a heart attack Thusday afternoon. Thinking the attack was slight, he continued working in the store. But later on, at his home, 511 Quackenbos street northwest, he collapsed, and Dr. Clayton Hawfield was summoned.

It looked like the end. Forty relatives gathered at the La Scola home, and a Catholic priest was called to administer the last rites.

LaScola's pulse beat was hardly noticeable, and his heart was tiring to an alarming extent. Stephen La Scola, jr., heard somebody utter the word "oxygen." He rushed to the telephone and called his own rescue squad of the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department.

The squad, commanded by Ralph Harries, arrived and presently oxygen was being administered to the elder La Scola through an inhalator. The treatment was continued through Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday and yesterday.

So much improved was La Scola yesterday that the inhalator was removed, and Stephen, jr., was able to relax his vigil. Members of the rescue squad who alternated in handling the inhalator were Capt. William Flagg, Dewey Hayes, Edward Schmitt, Stewart Berger and John Holzner.

Dr. Hawfield was so impressed by the work of the rescue squad that he made a note of its telephone number, promising to call on the members again in the event of a similar crisis.

Supply Bill Slash Scored By Citizens

Columbia Heights, Cleveland Park Groups Begin Attack.

Battles Are Forecast Before Supply Bill Becomes Law.

A few hours after the District budget was reported to the House, the first outcry was raised in Washington last night against the proposal to reduce the Federal Government's contribution to the city's maintenance.

The protest came from the Cleveland Park and Columbia Heights Citizens Asociations at their monthly meetings.

Other citizens associations which represent the principal group in the voteless city, are expected to voice similar protests, forecasting a spirited fight before the supply bill becomes law.

Disapproval Expected.

The taxation committee of the Cleveland Park association was directed to go before the Senate sub-committee that will consider the bill after it leaves the House and voice the organization's unanimous disapproval.

The Columbia Heights Citizens Association adopted a resolution protesting the reduced Federal contribution and calling upon all civic bodies in the city to unite in similar protests and in a campaign to give residents of the District rights as citizens.

George W. Offutt, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, in a speech before the Columbia Heights group, urged an increase in the personnel of the police force and greater co-operation between the police and the courts in enforcing the law.

Laws of District.

"We started with ten commandments, now we have ten thousand," observed Mr. Offutt. "No man could recite the law of the District of Columbia." He said he thought the law should be liberalized and then so rigidly enforced that all lawbreakers would expect certain detection, conviction and punishment.

The association also resolved to disapprove the repeal of the Red rider proposed by the Sisson bill and to petition Congress to permit residents of the District to elect the superintendent of schools and the Board of Education.

Addressing the Cleveland Park Association, Mrs. Ernest Parkinson outlined features of the proposed Juvenile Court bill. The measure, she said, would permit minors to waive indictment and jury trial and be brought before the Juvenile Court as a court of equity.

ZeBarney Phillips Ill of Pneumonia

The Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, chaplain of the United States Senate, is ill with pneumonia in his home at 2224 R street northwest, The Post learned last night.

Stricken Saturday, Dr. Phillips who also is pastor of the Church of the Epiphany on downtown G street, was for a time in grave danger, but last night physicians were able to inform members of his household the crisis has passed and that recovery could be expected.

Gable, Loy and Harlow Have Congenial Roles in Baldwin's "Wife vs. Secretary"

Follow West on Palace Screen In Near Future

By Nelson B. Bell.

Continuing the week's succession of private, preview screenings that has progressed from the gay musical-comedy revelries of "Follow the Fleet" to the impressive profundities of Louis Pasteur's struggle to establish his microbes as the chief bane of mankind, he Loew executives yesterday afternoon unfurled "Wife Versus Secretary" for the edification of the drama desks.

This is the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production founded on the Faith Baldwin novel of suspicion and personal delusion that bears the same name. It stars Myrna Loy, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow. And it is, needless to say, nothing more than another variation on the time-worn theme of the old, familiar domestic triangle—one of the mainstays of dramatic structure through the ages, tnat probably will endure as long as time.

There is nothing in this subject that might be described as sensational, although there is much that can be guaranteed to hold the interest of the romantically inclined.

Is Handsomely Staged.

The piece is investitured, as we say in the scene-painter's loft, with utmost lavishness. We are in the millionaire class in this subject and no meager, middle-class settings will do. They have to be grand and magnificent, and they are. One of the unfortunate net results of this addiction to the upper stratum of pictorial splendor is that it accentuates unduly how much better Clark Gable looks in sports togs than in those too-high, wing-collars he wears with his dinner jackets. Mr. Gable seems to have been made for the wide-open spaces—not places—rather than for the drawing rooms.

However, this is apart from the fact that in this translation of the Baldwin fiction there has been caught and effectively sustained a degree of romantic interest that is sure to write the picture down in the hit column.

Jean Harlow gets the worst of it, most of the way. Despite the fact that she is pursuing her own intermittent romance out of office hours, she still gets credit for having smashed up the domestic placidity and confidence that once characterized the trusting peace of the Van Sanford household. She is as innocent as an unhatched egg. Mrs. Van Sanford finally comes to know that.

Trio Congenially Cast.

There will be a complete review of this film in Saturday morning's issue of The Post, but, in the meantime, it seems no more than fair to say that it is an especially well-staged and directed subject in which three of the most popular of the screen's current stars are congenially cast.

There is some peculiar quality in the Faith Baldwin stories that makes them easily adaptable to screen uses and just as easily forgotten, once they are seen in motion. "Wife Versus Secretary" is a picture that will afford a fine hour or so's entertainment, while you are looking at it, and will not be remembered five minutes after the final fadeout.

At any rate, with all these previews, on top of a fairly well defined attack of the flu, we are getting 'way ahead on our home work. And "home work" is what it is apt to become, unless we can crack up this cold.

This "Wife Versus Secretary" we have just been talking about, was to have been the attraction on the screen of Loew's Palace Theater this Friday, but circumstances have kicked that idea vigorously over the heart, in a manner of speaking.

Mae West in "Klondike Annie" is on the way to a little record-setting at the Palace. Despite the fact that I deem it her least provocative picture and other editorial columns have assailed it as a work of a libidinous nature that should be suppressed, "Klondike Annie" did a week-end business at the Palace that came close to the mark set over a similar period by the same star's previous picture, "Goin' to Town," and on Monday exceeded the "take" of that film by $15. Yesterday it stepped farther into the van and surpassed still further the box-office popularity of its predecessor.

"Klondike Annie," it seems to me, is the least offensive of the Mae West pictures. It provides ample fuel to fire the resentment of religionists, to be sure, but is the least flagrant of any of its star's productions in the implications of sex, which was so eloquently described by Edward B. Locke in his novel of "The Morals of Marcus," as "the fundamental blunder of the universe"

We already have written of "Klondike Annie" in terms that were not wholly complimentary. We think it a stupid and useless picture. But, along with some others, we are in a conspicuously meager minority.

The public is going for it hook, line and sinker—not to mention one of the oars!

Sisters Still at Odds.

In a letter to the Fox management yesterday she wrote, "I'm convinced that this great picture will bring complete vindication for my father."

She stated also that she has been ill at her home in Charles County, Md., which has been the only reason for her not having returned to Washington to see the picture again.

With the writing of this letter, Mrs. Gardiner takes definite issue with the expressions of her sister, Mrs. Nettie Mudd Munroe, who didn't think the picture did her father justice.

"The Prisoner of Shark Island" remains on the Fox screen through Thursday night.

Mrs. Gardiner, I may say, is a better motion picture critic than her sister, Mrs. Monroe.

The continuation of the Mae West film for a second week at the Palace has forced "Anything Goes," the screen version of the stage hit, into Loew's Fox beginning Friday. As already has been stated, "Wife Versus Secretary" will follow "Klondike Annie," at the Palace, and then will come Charlie Chaplin and Paulette Goddard in "Modern Times." So now you know—or as nearly as the Loew executives themselves do!

Stellar Double Bill.

The world premiere of "Brides Are Like That," new Warner Bros. comedy, and the stage appearance of a new group of Major Bowes' Amateurs on tour, are announced for the Earle Thea' r for the week of March 20, according to John J. Payette, Warner Bros. general zone manager fo rthe Washington territory.

"In the combination of 'Brides Are Like That' and the Major Bowes' Amateur Unit, I believe that we have a program of ideal family entertainment," said Mr. Payette in making the announcement. "The picture, with Ross Alexander and Anita Louise, is a fast-moving, domestic comedy, certain to please every member of the family, while the advance report on Maj. Bowes' Unit, shows it to be even more entertaining than the successful group which played at the Earle a short time ago."

Included in the Bowes' Unit are Rufus Wilson Smith, singer from Smithfield, Va.; the Jersey Happy Rangers, a group of five boys who play string and reed instruments, and who come from the eastern hill-billy country between Passaic and New York City; Meyer Goldberg, the whistling grocery clerk; Rhoda Chase, pretty bass contralto; Harvey Mearns, the musical bell singer; Jackie Billings, young tap-dancer from Ontario, Canada, and Thelma Gaskin, singing saleslady from New York City.

Trials and tribulations have overtaken the usually orderly routine of the daily life of Gene Ford, manager of Loew's Fox Theater. For the past week Gene has been afflicted by an annoying ailment known by the plebean name of "pink eye." This has necessitated the wearing of dark glasses—not rose-colored—and a bandage over the left optic.

In addition to being rendered hors de combat by this irritating affliction, Gene also has been compelled to make two trips to the dentist's within the last four days, three teeth being yanked on each occasion!

He hopes to return to work—which, by some strange anomaly, he says will be a pleasure—within a day or two.

We know precisely how he feels. Ours is sinus, instead of "pink eye," but the dental aspects of the two cases seem to be about the same.

Well, podner, if I just had my teeth.

Broadway Catches Up.

With Evelyn Laye opening in the Booth Theater, in New York, tonight in "Sweet Aloes," seen for the first time in America in the National Theater here last week, it is interesting to note that others of the important productions that Washington has viewed ahead of Broadway have clicked in Manhattan.

William Gillette, of course, was welcomed back Sunday night in the revival of Austin Strong's "Three Wise Fools," which the Capital saw some weeks ago, and will run out his brief New York engagement to a salvo of critical and lay applause that should do his heart good.

On Monday night George M. Cohan took his "Dear Old Darling" into the precincts of the Broadway Death Watch and, needless to say, captivated them by the sheer humor and audacity of a piece which a majority of the critics refused to recognize as Cohan at his best, but which, on the other hand, none could fail to appreciate as a frolic of the most engaging sort.

Miss Cornell Ill.

Tonight Miss Laye will get her turn, along with Rex Harrison, Joyce Carey—who authored the play, under the nom de plume of Jay Mallory—John Litel and the others who were seen here last week—Nicholas Joy supplanting Charles Bryant in the role of the elder Lord Farrington.

It is a regretable circumstance that this week's scheduled New York opening of Katharine Cornell in George Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan," in the Martin Beck Theater, has had to be deferred to next Monday night to enable Miss Cornell to recover from this same pesky thing that we are trying to shake off, a combination of laryngitis and sinus that renders one no help whatever in the performance of his public duties.

We are laying modest mental odds on both Miss Laye and Miss Cornell.

A welcome visitor to the drama desk yesterday afternoon was Miss Thoda Cocroft, Chicagoan, occasionally impressed into the higher service of the drama, who is avant couriering, as you might say, the impending engagement of George Gershin's folk opera of "Porgy and Bess" at the National Theater. The operatic version of the romance of Catfish Walk in Charleston is based on the play "Porgy" originally written by Mr. and Mrs. DuBose Heyward. Tedd Duncan, former member of the professional staff at Howard University, sings the role of Porgy. Miss Cocroft has many fine ideas for the exploitation of this significant bit of American creative talent. She also is learning something to the advantage of all concerned in the matter of the manner in which it might best be presented in Washington.

Retraction Note.

Zone Manager John J. Payette, of the Warner Brothers interests in the Washington territory, resents the implications of yesterday's last paragraphs. He declares emphatically that he really was in Florida and while it may have been a sun lamp that gave him that tan, it certainly was not at 5910 Sixteenth street.

Imagine using a sun lamp in Miami Beach! I am laughing, that high-strung Southern gentleman, Sam Galanty, to the contrary, notwithstanding!

Spring Here

Colder Forecast, But Mann Cites Peacock Feathers.

The temperature rose to 51 yesterday and there was a vernal flavor in the air.

Dr. William M. Mann, director of the Zoo, said:

"Other signs may mislead, but male peacocks never fail you."

He pointed to a peacock whose fan-like tail, brilliant in the sun, spread over the sidewalk.

Charles C. Clark, assistant chief of the Weather Bureau, said that the peacock prognostication was "a new one on me." Mr. Clark's forecasters, after studying their instruments and their reports, said Washington today would be cloudy and warmer. But late tonight, the forecast said, it would be rainy and colder, the peacock to the contrary notwithstanding.

Local Stadium Planned in Bill Of Mrs. Norton

Parade Field, Swimming Pools Are Included in New Measure.

A new District stadium bill, providing for its construction with PWA or WPA funds, if available, in Anacostia Park, was introduced in the House yesterday by Chairman Norton, of the House District Committee.

The measure authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the National Park Service, to construct a parade field, swimming pools, a stadium, other recreational facilities, and appropriate paking facilities and approaches.

Plans must be submitted prior to construction to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Commission on Fine Arts for approval.

The recreational center, upon its completion, would remain under the direction of the National Park Service, but the latter is authorized to enter into contracts with "any individual, organization, association, or corporation" for its operation.

All receipts from any fees or charges collected for the use of the facilities must be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. The aim is to have the deposits within 20 years equal the Government's investment in the area, both as to cost of construction and maintenance.

The bill was referred to the District committee, and hearings will be held within a few weeks, according to Mrs. Norton.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the Metropolitan Opera Quartet (Helen Jepson, Rose Bampton, Charles Hackett and Richard Bonelli) in Constitution Hall Tuesday night; Ernst Wolff, accompanist. Program: Arias, duets and quartets from "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," "La Forza del Destino," "La Boheme," "Carmen," "Faust," "Lakme," "Don Giovanni," "Herodiade," "Le Roi de Lahore," "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," "Veronique," and "Rigoletto."

A large audience waxed so enthusiastic last night as to seem bent upon exacting full recital value from each member of the quartet in addition to the concerted numbers. The artists, individually and in combination, were generous in response, and the added numbers ran the program considerably beyond the two-hour limit which custom sets. There was just cause for the applausive excitement in the excellent singing which the visitors from the Metropolitan presented.

The change of personnel in the organization since last season has resulted in the raising of both technical and artistic standards. With a salaam to those admirers of Edward Johnson and Grace Moore who may not agree with me, I believe that the substitution of Charles Hackett and Helen Jepson has greatly improved the efficacy of the group. It is true that Mr. Hackett's voice has lost some of its lyric sweetness in the last decade, but its sonority is as fine as of yore, and his admirable breath control maintains its discipline. Miss Jepson is steadily advancing in artistry and her intelligence is evident in her growing finesse.

Were I to choose one from the group for special laudation, it would be Rose Bampton, whose artistic stature is visibly increasing from year to year. Her singing of the aria, "Pace, mio Dio," was so eminently satisfactory in its phrasing, its coloration and its emotional urgency that I thought she could not surpass the performance, but she promptly proceeded to do so with "Il est doux, it est bon," a genuine triumph of vocal beauty.

Having begun as a contralto, Miss Bampton is developing into one of the best mezzo-sopranos that I have ever heard. There is in her singing no trace of artifice, no display of skill for its own sake, and no false historionism. She sings with honesty, with sincerity, with true feeling. As for her technical experise, she did so well in the duet from "The Barber of Seville" that I feel sure that, if she is given the opportunity to sing Rosina at the Metropolitan, she will make a memorable success.

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, March 3.

BECAUSE of the many war pictures that have been filmed and are being filmed at Fox-Twentieth Century, it would be better to assign a war correspondent than a movie correspondent to cover this studio.

Somewhere on the Fox-Twentieth Century front: Maj. Gen. Howard Hawks directed the fighting 39th Division of French troops across "No Man's Land" this afternoon. When Maj. Gen. Hawks gave the signal to shoot for "Zero Hour," the tired blue uniformed troops obeyed the call and led by those fine troupers, Fredric March and Warner Baxter, they captured Sound Stage 5. The bombardment continued and when the smoke cleared away, the inspired 39th were marching toward Sound Stage 12. Maj. Gen. Hawks received an official communique from Field Marshal Darryl Zanuck, who claimed a big victory. Maj. Gen. Hawks declared that he was ready to fight it out on these lines if it took all summer, but Field Marshal Zanuck is shooting this war according to a schedule.

Field Marshal Zanuck has an enviable war record. He has won more wars than Napoleon. Field Marshal Zanuck won the Spanish-American War in "A Message for Garcia." He won the Civil War with Shirley Temple in "The Littlest Rebel," and he won the Civil War again in "Shark Island." The number of "Graustark" wars to his credit are too numerous to mention. Not only did he win more wars than Napoleon, but he defeated Napoleon with Gen. George Arliss in command in "The House of Rothschild." Field Marshal Zanuck's big concern is that he is running out of wars. It is said that he has taken an option on Japan.

The next technicolor picture you will see is "Dancing Pirate." This is being made by Pioneer, the same firm which made "Becky Sharp." The star performers are Steffi Dunni, who made a hit in the techincolor short, "La Cucuracha," and Charles Colling, the dancer and husband of Dorothy Stone, who is making his first movie debut. The flicker is being directed by Lloyd Corrigan, and the man who is supervising the use of color is Robert Edmond Jones.

Jones, the noted stage director, is now devoted to color designing. He firmly believes that all pictures will be made in color. He is still experimenting. In the "Dancing Pirate," he is using what he terms "imaginative color;" that is, he is using those colors which fit the scene best or photograph best, regardless of the fact that they aren't natural. For example, if the color blue isn't good for the scene, he changes the color of the sky.

The "Dancing Pirate" will be novel because it is a musical flicker, the first feature of this type in technicolor. The words and music are by Larry Hart and Dick Rodgers.

Few bright colors are being used; the only time red is employed is when the dancing girls wave red caps. The picture is being filmed in subdued shades, mostly gray. The new style in making a technicolor flicker is to get as little color as possible in it.

The story of the "Dancing Pirate" takes place in California in the year 1802, and therefore a pirate, who has the battleship Maine tattooed on his chest, has to be taken out of the closeup.

A scene for "Mob Rule," the flicker which features Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sidney, is being filmed. The director is Fritz Lang. Lang is the director who made the picture "M" with Peter Lorre, and has been waiting at Metro for almost two years for the opportunity to direct a picture. He is not camera shy.

Director Lang is tall, speaks with a slight German accent and wears a monocle. He rehearses his performers more than the average director. When they get ready to face the camera, Director Lang believes he knows what they are going to do. He also toys with the camera, for he prefers to get what are known as "camera angles" to practically every scene.

This particular scene merely calls for Sylvia Sidney to step into a phone booth, deposit three nickels and get her number. Miss Sidney, while waiting to phone, sits on a chair. She looks charming, wearing a neat suit and a thin, revealing blouse. Director Lang comments on this. Sylvia answers: "I guess I underdressed for the part!"

Between "takes" on the set of the flicker, "San Francisco," Clark Gable sits on a stool talking to a lady. I am sitting next to Director Van Dyke. "Know who that woman is?" asks Van Dyke. "No," I answer. "That's Helen Ferguson," says Director Van Dyke. "She used to be my leading lady back in Chicago in 1917. She's not an actress now, but she was pretty innocent then. One day we went in for lunch in a combination restaurant and saloon. I ordered an oyster cocktail, and asked her if she'd have one. 'No,' she answered, 'I never drink.' Honest, she actually said that. You can ask her." I asked Miss Ferguson and she admitted it was true. But talking to Gable, she seemed much wiser.

President Signs Bill to Abolish Airport Hazard

Empowers Corporation to Place Gates on Road; Runway Planned.

President Roosevelt yesterday signed the joint resolution intended to alleviate a hazard to motorists and to air transportation at Military road and Washington Airport.

The new law gives the National Airport Corporation clear authority to maintain traffic guards, erect gates or place any safeguards deemed necessary at the point where planes cross Military road in landing or taking off.

Rigid penalties, with prosecution before the United States commissioner at Alexandria, or in the Eastern Federal District Court of Virginia, are provided in the act. All safeguards are subject to approval by the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

Samuel J. Solomon, airport manager, was out of the city yesterday, but it is presumed he will immediately make arrangements to make more rigid the present safeguards on Military road.

The airport officials also plan to expand the field by including Hoover Field and by building a temporary runway over the War Department's roadway.

Echaniz to Give Concert Tonight

Jose Echaniz, distinguished Cuban pianist, and Maria de la Torre, Cuban violinist, will be presented in a recital tonight in the Willard Hotel ballroom by Beren-Brook Artists, the new Washington concert management. Both artists will be making their first appearance in the Capital.

Two days after his recital here, Jose Echaniz will appear as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra, playing the new Malipiero concerto. He will repeat the performance in Philadelphia on March 7 and 10, and in New York on March 17. He is well known in the United States as former assisting artist with Tito Schipa on tour.

Maria de la Torre is generally considered the leading woman violinist of Latin America. She has toured extensively in Central and South America, and has made several visits to Spain, where she won great popularity. In her part of the program tonight she will feature Joaquin Turina's suite, "El Poema de una Sanluquena," which she had the honor of playing with the composer at its premiere in Seville.

Broadway

Returns to New York By Ed Sullivan

Dawn Patrol.

New York, March 3.

NOTRE DAME'S Walter O'Keefe, at the Tavern, sits opposite Strangler Lewis, the wrestler . . . A lot of performers claim they were Texas Guinan's products . . . O'Keefe actually was . . . He clicked when he revived "The Man on the Flying Trapeze" . . . Add Curios: Jerome Zerbe, at El Morocco, doing a pencil caricature of Caricaturist Zito . . . At the Stork Club, Sherman Billingsley, an Enid, Okla., product, tells me that Scotch is the favorite drink now . . . Night club owners push the sale of rye for a bigger profit, but it's no go . . . Scotch leads . . . Sam Goldwyn and his wife are one of the nicer-looking couples . . . Always admired him for his consummate gambling nerve . . . He's the Betcha-a-Million Gates of Hollywood, 'plenty of "moxie" . . . The Robert Youngs and June Knight celebrated the second wedding anniversary of the Nat Goldstones a few hours ago . . . "Thought you were in Miami," says Young, and then repeats it . . . His wife, Betty, hushes him . . . "You said that before, Bob," she says . . . "So I did," says Young, 'but I still thought he was in Miami" . . . They'd come from the Pierre with Harry Evans, St. Augustine's chief claim to distinction, a Fountain of Youth kid.

Benny Fields continues as the rage of New York . . . You are familiar with the story: After years of discouragement, this great song stylist clicked at Joey Jacobson's Chez Paree in Chicago, and then came on to the Stem to score the most amazing individual success ever registered on Broadway . . . Cheated of applause and recognition during the lean years, Fields now wins a storm of applause after every song, the same songs he sang in the same way six months ago when he couldn't get a job . . . Under your very eyes, another miracle is now occurring: Fields, back in the money on Broadway, his salary doubled, his name in lights and his picture in every newspaper and magazine, is getting younger . . . He's shedding the years that piled up on him when the calendar was only a record of disappointments, a day-by-day reminder that things were going from bad to worse . . . I guess age is only in the heart—and Benny Fields' heart again is 17.

John Boles, Frances Arms, Boris Morros, Ruth Roland, Freddie (Roxy) Mack, Dave Apollon, Jay C. Flippen, Bugs Baer, Anatole Friedland . . . Jammed into the Hollywood . . . They came to cheer Fields, remained to cheer Josephine Huston, too, the Al Siegel singer who will be another of the town's sensations . . . Another striking feature of the evening was a lovely girl, a deaf mute, who dances superbly, a solo waltz . . . Her name is Charlotte Lamberton, and she is very young . . . She and her brother, born to normal parents, both are deaf and dumb . . . The brother, encouraged by his sister's success, now is coming on from California to double with her . . . The girl is a prettier edition of Janet Gaynor . . . Third "kick" of the evening came when Billie Burns, who quit the chorus line last Wednesday, made her debut as a ballroom dancer . . . The team is billed as Burns and White, and it's excellent.

Add Water Under the Bridge: On the same day that the Sun runs a cartoon of 25 years ago, Abe Ruef, mentioned in the cartoon, dies on the Coast . . . He was the creator of one of the most corrupt political machines in California history . . . A grand jury indicted him on 85 counts in 1908, and he was sent to San Quentin . . . What the papers fail to state, however, is that the foreman of that grand jury was Major Bowes.

Second half of the French Casino show hits a new high in Stem entertainment, makes you wonder why American producers can't match the Continental in novelty ideas . . . Dance of the Faces, with faces drawn on the bare backs of the chorines, is Grade A imagination . . . Clifford Fischer tells me that every patron who comes to the Casino asks the same question: They want to see the widow of Stavisky, Frenchman who killed himself in one of the great financial scandals of France . . . Tall, serious-faced, she parades with the showgirls . . . Between shows, she completes her memoirs, which will be issued in book form shortly . . . Dance team of Estelle and LeRoy, acrobatic trio of the Bredwins and dance music by Jack Denny are show superlatives . . . Denny comes from Greencastle, Ind., attended De Pauw University, which also graduated Ford Frick, president of the National League . . . Study in blues: Rocco Vocco and George Piantadosi, popular Tin Pan Alley pair . . . But Warner tunes, which they handle, can't be played, and they have nothing to do but sit and sit.

Van & Cameron Feature Show At Heigh-Ho

Crack Dance Team Comes Here From Round of 'Furrin' Spots.

By Chanticleer.

It's Evelyn Van and Fred Cameron Week at Ol' Massa Pete Macia's Heigh-Ho Club. Evelyn and Fred come to the home precincts direct from the Arcadia, where they danced to the competent strains of Leon Belasco's music.

In fact, the last few months have been just one round of very nice places to be for this talented team. They've been to Nassau, Jamaica and such other furrin points as the Mayfair in Boston—and the Waldorf and Westchester-Biltmore in New York, and Atlantic City's Traymore.

Fred Cameron hasn't been in Washington for some five years. He remembers that last visit very well. He was appearing at the old Michel and went up in an aeroplane—the idea being he was to help Santa distribute toys. Alas, and alack! As the plane door opened, Santa fell right out on his nose. He'd been overcome by air-sickness.

For this first week at the Heigh-Ho, Cameron and his partner (who formerly was one of the Van Sisters) hew themselves closely to the ballroom line, figuring that enough tango and waltz have been seen for the nonce. They open with a sophisticated musical comedy number and follow with "Blue Prelude," in the modern manner.

You're missing something if you haven't jined in on one of those informal Sunday nights in the Heigh-Ho Taproom. From 11 to 2 and anything may happen.

* * * *

Mat Windsor has made another of those I'm-going-after-gold trips to Manhattan, and this time he returned with Boris Yourloff—the gentleman who moves over the Volga Boatman floor skimming a huge saber over the customers' heads. Boris has appeared in Washington before and never fails to register. What, oh what, say the ringsiders, would happen if Boris slipped? Boris just never slips, is the answer to that one.

They had their troubles last Monday night at La Paree deciding the amateur contest winner. Every one was good. And a little hill-billy singer, Betty Less, from 'way down Tidwater Virginia, took the marbles. Jeanette and Kalan, ballroom artists, and Daniels and Doyle, comedy dancers, head the week's floor show. Then there's Francis Kearns and the Six Little Coeds for background and, of course, gals always make a nice background and all that sort of thing.

Marion Wilkins and Jack Meyers are back at the Shoreham for an encore after their appearance earlier in the season. Their new routine brought down the house, according to some of the citizenry present. The De Von Brothers make their muscles ripple and Miss Lorraine Chevalier sits on her head, believe it or not, in one of the most difficult acrobatic stunts seen in many a day.

Mildred Fredericks is the mimic doing those Mae West imitations at the Dude Ranch this week. Peggy Faye is on hand again and Jimmy Staley and the rest of the gang, as usual. . . . It becomes Al Norton's pleasure this week to introduce to Lotus guests the originators of the Slave Whip Dance, none other than Del Reo and Dorothy; Maree and muse, in rhythm tap specialties, and Roy Kiser, radio singer. It's another Earl Lindsey "Tomp Topics" revue. . . . It's not just a press agent's dream!

The Russian Troika's versatile Karavaeff really was the first Russian-American dancer. He came to these contree in 1922 with Anna Pavlowa—as her partner, in truth. When Pavlowa went back to Europe, he stayed to accept a featured spot in a Ziegfeld Follies. . . . Contrary to previous announcement, Jack and Leo have not left the Mayfair. Just Leo. Jack is still at the old stand. Milbourne Christopher is back, by popular demand, and will prove to you the hand is still quicker than the eye. And Michael, the accordionist, is back. I personally recommend Michael for good moosics . . .

Carol Vance, adequately described as a "beautiful brunette," is singing a choice selection of sophisticated ditties at the Maryland Club Gardens these evenings. She really is a joy to behold, or rather to listen to. She's from Tennessee—and doesn't have an accent . . . Maybe you don't like checkers, but the LaFayette's "Checkerboard Room" is thriving on "checkers and cocktails." The guest receives a menu in the form of a checkerboard which he plays on and keeps as a souvenir. Music by the Two Checkers . . .

It's a swell story at the Madrillon this week. Peter Borras is a grand guy and every once in awhile stakes a stranded artist to fare back to the Big Stem in return for appearances at the Madrillon. He presents Elena Gabriel this week, under such auspices . . . Charlie Opunui, steel guitarist with the Hi-Hat's Paradise Islanders, is specializing this week in the difficult ninth notes in a variety of songs. And ask him to do "Wahoo." Really the business.

Prominent in the Night Club Shows This Week

On the Air Today

FROM his third floor room in a Pittsburgh hotel, Jack Benny sent the following telegram to his friends at Radio City: "Come down and see me sometime."

In other words, Benny is ribbing the Gothamites who are walking wearily up and down 10, 20—even 30 flights of stairs as the New York elevator operators' strike hits page boy and air star alike.

Graham McNamee is the worst affected. McNamee is on crutches as a result of a sprained ankle. He has made two trips thus far up and down 17 flights. Everyone, however, in the show business is seriously handicapped for extra time must be allowed for trips to and from the studios.

Helen Hayes is one who found relief in special personal service, inaugurated by the superintendent of her building. She's on the seventh floor and a seven-floor heel-and-toe excursion between radio and theater engagements and rehearsals is not good for an emotional performer.

The prize laugh was at the expense of Molasses 'n' January. They walked up 23 flights—and found that substitutes, under the protection of guards, were running an elevator or two in their building. Jane and Patti Pickens, appearing this week at the Paramount Theater and Radio City's Rainbow Room, as well as in studio shows, have had numerous struggles with 12 flights of stairs in their apartment building.

But the curious part of the whole business is that service apparently is being maintained in the Rockefeller Center buildings. Just wait until the strike spreads to its scores of floors. Then there really will be some tired radio artists.

"Talkative Tom," the Mynah bird with the deceitful name, will be back with Fred Allen tonight. Tom has made two appearances thus far and hasn't uttered a syllable. Allen is determined and last week threatened to present Tom for the next six months, if necessary, to prove he really can talk. "That bird chatters his head off until we get him in front of a microphone," Allen insists.

That leads to the obvious observation that Tom has a lot more judgement than some human performers when confronted with a mike.

You just never can tell where and when Uncle Arthur Godfrey may turn up next. Yesterday, for example, Frederic William Wile completed his resume of the President's tax message to Congress and a pianist was needed for about 20 seconds of standby music before the network was broken. It was none other than Arthur, who was pressed into service. J. H. H.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

ESTABLISHMENT of a National Academy of Public Affairs is provided in the Disney bill, H. R. 11225, introduced by Representative Wesley E. Disney (Democrat), of Oklahoma.

BAKER.

The bill provides that members of Congress may appoint each year young men and women on the basis of selection adopted at West Point and Annapolis that these young people shall be trained for the administrative service, and that they shall have civil service status upon graduation from the academy. The students selected would be between 17 and 25 years old.

The Disney bill also provides that the academy should be operated on a nonsectarian and nonpartisan basis.

This proposed "West Point" of the civil service is opposed by E. Claude Babcock, president, American Federation of Government Employes, who said last night:

" * * * the net effect will be to add to the patronage of each member of Congress and to build up a caste system, as a result of which graduates of this institution would have a clear preference over the rank and file of civil service employes for all the more important administrative positions in the service.

"We would be heartily in favor of a bill to establish an academy or other opportunity for training for administrative positions for men and women who have entered the civil service on their merits, and who would be chosen for such training on the basis of their excellent records in the service, and if Mr. Disney will amend his bill along these lines we will be 100 per cent for it."

55 Workers Needed.

Approximately 55 more workers will be added to Bureau of Engraving and Printing, bringing the extra force on the adjusted service bonds up to 330. Prior to February 28 temporary appointments reached 275 in the following classifications:

Pressmen, 14; operatives (women), 125; skilled helpers, 48; press helpers, 4; plate printers, 25, and printers' assistants, 59.

The Sick Benefit Association of the American Federation of Government Employes will meet tomorrow at 8 p. m. at the Willard Hotel to vote on proposed changes in the by-laws that deal with additional noncompensable diseases and notification of illness while ill, according to Miss Mary C. Bieber, secretary.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF F, P or C appears after your name in this column, call in person on the Federal Diary editor today only between 3:30 and 5 p. m. You will receive tickets to one of the following Loew's theaters: F. Loew's Fox (stage, "Bring on the Dames" and other acts; screen, Warner Baxter in "The Prisoner of Shark Island"); or to P. Loew's Palace (Mae West and Victor McLaglen in "Klondike Annie"); or, to C. Loew's Columbia (Mala in "Last of the Pagans").

Just One of Those Things.

Federal clerks, we'd like to ask you,
Did you ever have the luck
When you'd typed some weighty paper,
Only to be thunder struck
By observing all your efforts
Really were of no avail;
For you'd skipped some vital sentence
Needed quite in full detail.
What, we ask, can be more piquing
Than such luck, will someone tell,
Especially when one is seeking
To make sure the job's done well?

Agriculture.

Ira Y. Bain (F), Internal Revenue, will be one of the principal speakers at the mass meeting Thursday night at Central High School when the Washington rental and housing problem will be discussed.

U. S. D. A. Authors.

Joseph E. Alicata, junior zoologist, Bureau of Animal Industry, is the author of a new 100-page Agriculture bulletin on "Early Development Stages of Nematodes Occurring in Swine." It is illustrated with hundreds of drawings, done by the author, of the various stages of these parasitic worms.

Three U. S. D. A. entomologists have collaborated in a study of "The Biology of the Screw Worm Fly," just issued. They are E. W. Laake, Emory C. Cushing and H. E. Parish, Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine. Screw worms, they say, have long been known to inflict serious injury to man and animals in the subtropical and tropical regions of North America and South America. The paper contains a full-page colored plate of the adult screw worm fly, from a drawing by David G. Hall, of the same bureau.

Labor Department Anniversary.

With Secretary Perkins heading the receiving line, Labor Department employes will celebrate the department's twenty-second anniversary at the Mayflower Hotel tomorrow night at a reception and dance. Prominent in charge of arranging the fete are:

Leigh L. Nettleton, Bessie E. Henderson, Henry J. Fitzgerald, Mrs. Grace H. Barrett, Grace Hudson, Paris F. Keener, Eva W. Burton, John Crown, Julia Joyce, Ruby E. Massey, Hildegarde M. Schotthofer, Eva M. Bonnette, V. Paul Carney, Marie Cobb, Joseph B. Ragan, Mary E. Spear, Aline A. Chambers, Dorothy Bailey, James E. Dodson, Nelle M. Petrowski, John H. Zabel, Samuel J. Gompers, Robert C. Starr, Margaret M. Dunkley (C), and Mary D. Prendergast.

Karn, County Head, Reported Improved

Frank H. Karn, president of the Montgomery County commissioners, last night was reported improving rapidly after an operation for appendicitis at Georgetown University Hospital.

Karn was taken to Georgetown when he became seriously ill Monday. Doctors were uncertain as to the cause of his illness until the diagnostic facilities of the hospital made possible accurate diagnosis. His appendix was removed yesterday at 2 p. m. and last night Dr. W. S. Murphy, of Rockville, announced that it was believed Mr. Karn was out of danger.

Culbertson on Bridge

Super-Strategy.

Due, perhaps, to my European birth and schooling, I always have had enormous respect for those rare men whose perfect manners and delicate finesse are equal to any situation that may arise at the bridge table and with a feminine partner. Not that women are difficult partners, in a technical sense. Temperamentally, however, they are apt to be a trifle sensitive and to become suddenly either tearful or vituperative. The latter is bearable, but the former is terrifying!

Playing in a recent tournament, my partner and I found ourselves opposed to a mixed pair. The woman was charming, but nervous. On the first board they were vulnerable, we were not. The man opened the bidding with one heart and I, with an almost worthless hand containing an eight-card spade suit headed by the king-queen, attempted to shut out a vulnerable game with a preemptive bid of four spades. Every one passed. Since the woman showed up with four spades to the ace-jack-ten and several other tricks, and my partner was jack high, I went down four tricks, for a very good score, not having been doubled.

As his partner raked in trick after trick, he himself taking only a few, since he had a minimum bid, the man's face was a study. Perhaps his partner, with feminine intuition, sensed that she should have bid something or other, rather than passing, because she seemed close to tears. But Gallahad in all his armor never could have saved the day as did this gallant unknown. In a voice fairly dripping with apology, he said: "I'm so sorry, partner. I should have realized you were making a forcing pass!"

Leading Against a Small Slam.

Only the closest attention to the bidding will allow the opening leader to choose between a lead that is apparently safe and one that actually is so.

NORTH

♥ Q J 10 9 8 5
♦ A K 6

WEST

EAST

♦ Q 9 7 2
♣ K 6 5

SOUTH
♠ A K Q J 10 6 5
♥ None
♦ J 10 5
♣ A 4 3

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 heart	Pass	2 spades	Pass
3 hearts	Pass	3 spades	Pass
4 hearts	Pass	6 spades [final bid]

Undoubtedly South was highly optimistic on bidding the slam, considering his void in partner's bid suit. Nevertheless, he almost made it!

West was extremely tempted to lay down a high heart honor "to take a took," but after considerable thought he changed his mind. It was perhaps obvious that North had no secondary suit, otherwise he would have bid it instead of twice rebidding hearts. That being so, if the declarer had losing hearts, on what could he discard them?

The considered choice of the club jack as the opening lead proved to be quite effective. With the king in East's hand, the declarer was helpless, and was defeated two tricks, losing two clubs and one diamond.

The lead of the heart king would be fatal to the defenders. South would ruff, draw trumps, and enter dummy with a diamond. He then would lead the heart queen and pass it, discarding a club or diamond from his own hand.

Truly Rural America That Faces Resettlement

Associated Press Photos.

OUT IN THE COUNTRY—U. S. A.—Millions of Americans go abroad every year to see the "quaint sights and people," little realizing, apparently, that right in their own back yard the sights and people are 100 per cent quaint as well as 100 per cent American. Above, left, are mountain folk snapped in Shenandoah National Park, Va. Next are two miners at Jenkins, Ky., taking time off for lunch; the grime of their trade is much in evidence. A child of a North Carolina sharecropper appears wistful and a bit sad. The last picture in the top panel, taken by a Resettlement Administration candid cameraman, shows a familiar rural type. He is Postmaster Brown, at Old Rag, Va. The lower panel shows an unemployed trapper of Plaquemine Parish, La. (left). It is the job of the Administration to "resettle" such men whose industry, like all others, has been hit by the depression. A workman in an old and glamorous business (center)—the Mississippi River boatman. This deckhand is on a vessel docked at Memphis, Tenn. Last, three Creole girls of Louisiana, with melody in their faces. Note the unusual stringed instrument. Beauties of this type are common in Louisiana.

4 Top Fives To Forego Olympics

Long Island U., N. Y. U., Notre Dame, Purdue Won't Compete.

Task of Selecting Five Teams for Trials to Begin This Week.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 3.—The task of selecting five college basketball teams to compete in the Olympic finals at Madison Square Garden early in April gets under way this week-end with several of the country's outstanding quintets, including unbeaten Long Island University among the absentees.

Long Island University, winner of 33 straight games over a span of two years; New York University, rated the East's best until a late-season slump, and Notre Dame, whipped only once this year, today joined Purdue's powerful team in declining to compete in the tryouts.

Dean Tristom Walter Metcalfe handed down Long Island's decision, declaring the Blackbirds "had decided not to compete because the university would not, under any circumstances, be represented in the Olympic games held in Germany."

Couldn't Spare Time.

At New York University, where the team, like that of Long Island's, is largely Jewish, the decision was left up to the players. Philip O. Badger, chairman of the board of athletic control, wrote H. H. Salmon, chairman of District No. 1, that most of the players felt they couldn't spare the time from their work.

Notre Dame declined to compete because the tryouts would require the players to be absent from classes for a long period of time and because of the long season.

Even with several leading teams not competing, the tryouts, conducted by the National Collegiate A. A., have taken on gigantic proportions. From the ten district and inter-district tournaments five teams will survive, to meet the A. A. U. champions and runner-ups and the Y. M. C. A. titleholders in the finals at the Garden April 3-5.

District No. 2, headed by such outstanding teams as Pittsburgh, Duquesne and Temple, also has drawn a large entry list. Four colleges—Pitt, Bethany, Duquesne and West Virginia—will meet in a preliminary journey at Pittsburgh. The other four — George Washington, Temple, Georgetown and St. Johns of Annapolis — will play either at Washington or Baltimore, with the winners clashing at Philadelphia March 21.

Presidents to Rule On Grid Warriors

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, March 3.—Forest Fletcher, president of the Southern Conference, said today that the presidents of conference schools will pass upon the eligibility of athletes in their respective institutions when controversies arise under the Graham plan.

"All the conference will require," he said, "is a statement from the president of a school, saying that so-and-so is eligible, in case that person's eligibility is questioned. And make no mistake, we expect to have a lot of them questioned.

"I am looking for a tremendous amount of misunderstanding, accusations and argument next fall," the conference head said. "Under the new scheme, each school will have a half-dozen chairmen of various sports groups. I frankly don't know whom to select in case misunderstandings come up, so I have decided to refer al cases of eligibility to the presidents of the various schools.

Ohio State Five Stops Notre Dame's Streak

South Bend, Ind., March 3 (AP).—Ohio State defeated Notre Dame's basketball quintet here tonight, 28 to 23, and broke an Irish winning streak that had reached 13 games. It was the second time this season that a Big Ten team had upset the powerful Ramblers.

Earl Thomas, giant Buckeye center, and Tippy Dye, speedy little guard, were the heroes of the Ohio State victory. Thomas was high-point man with five goals, while Dye held Johnny Moir, Notre Dame's scoring ace to 3 points, the lowest total Moir had registered this season.

Garfield Girls Victors In A. A. U. Tournament

After a toe-to-toe struggle in the first half, which ended with Mount Rainier leading, 11 to 10, the Garfield girls came back strong to win decisively, 27 to 15, in the A. A. U.-Post basketball tournament last night in the Heurich gym. The winners gained the semifinal bracket.

Heurich Five Host To Fleetwings Sunday

The Gettysburg Fleetwings, generally rated as one of the fastest, smoothest and, incidentally, roughest pro team in the East, will help the Heurich quintet ring down the curtain on the local pro season Sunday in the Brewers' gym. The tap-off will be at 2:30 o'clock.

O'Mahoney's Manager To Ignore Shikat Win

By the United Press.

BOSTON, March 3.—Old John Q. Public tonight faced what, to many, is the equivalent of death and taxes—a wrestling "champion" in every stable.

The possibility grew out of the defeat in New York last night of Title Claimant Danno O'Mahoney, of Ireland, by Dick Shikat, of Philadelphia.

Sponsors of O'Mahoney came forth today with an announcement that the Irish lad will continue to barnstorm the country as heavyweight champion of the universe "just as if that thing in New York did not happen."

The announcement, prepared by the office of Boston's No. 1 pachyderm promoter, Paul Bowser, said the American Wrestling Association and the St. Louis commission will string along with O'Mahoney.

Protesting most violently the turn of affairs which saw Danno stripped of his title claim was Jack McGrath, O'Mahoney's manager. McGrath borrowed a phrase made famous in boxing circles by Joe Jacobs—"We wuz robbed"—polished it up a bit grammatically and asserted, "We were jobbed."

McGrath claimed Shikat's "winning" hammerlock didn't hurt Danno a bit and said Referee George Bothner had no right stopping the bout and awarding Shikat the victory.

His report, plus those of "critics of the sport" and unnamed newspapermen that Danno was "jobbed" have been accepted by the association and the commission, the announcement said, as authentic.

So at least two wrestlers will parade around the country under the aegis of "champion." And the possibilities are unlimited.

Whether it is open warfare between wrestling tycoons or just a synthetic brawl to drum up trade is another matter.

One version is that brother promoters figured Bowser had a champion under his wing long enough (one year) and that it was their turn now.

Another is that it would be better for the box office if Danno "left" his championship with someone else here before returning to Ireland next June on that much-deferred trip.

Still another is that O'Mahoney's box-office appeal has faded outside of Boston. In this connection it was pointed out that, while the O'Mahoney-Yvon Robert match here last Friday night drew some 18,000 customers.

Of course, it's quite possible that the whole thing is being chewed over for the purposes of ballyhooing outdoor matches this summer.

The Bowser announcement that O'Mahoney was still "champion" also said:

"Robert's supporters declare Danno received in New York just what Robert received here (Friday night). Yvon, they argue, pinned Danno at least 15 times, but each time Referee (Ted) Tonneman was counting his money instead of watching shoulders."

Dr. McCauliff Is Swamped By Mangin

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 3.—Gregory Mangin's stock rose bullishly today as he cut down towering Dr. Eugene McCauliff in decisive fashion and entered the quarter-final round in defense of his United States Indoor Singles tennis championship.

Fully recovered from his recent illness and more closely approximating his characteristic mercurial form, the three-time champion swarmed all over the former Fordham star in registering a decisive straight-set victory, 6—2, 6—2.

With Mangin setting the pace, the old established order of form held sway in all divisions of play—men's and women's singles and doubles competitions. After eight hours of industry, the singles divisions were reduced to eight players each, with the quarter-finalists not scheduled to play again until Thursday.

Tomorrow's program will be given over to doubles.

To Oppose Culley.

The titleholder's opponent in the round of eight will be Henry Culley, of Santa Barbara, Calif. Culley overcame stubborn opposition furnished by Mel Lapman, Eastern intercollegiate champion, in scoring an overtime triumph, 10—12, 7—5, 6—1.

Seeded fifth, Culley found in Lapman a deft volleyer and had to summon all of the wizardry at his command to squelch him.

Karle Schroeder, Sweden's foremost singles duelist, and Frank Bowden, rugged New Yorker, won their third-round engagements to fill another quarter-final bracket for what promises to be the stand-out match. Schroeder disposed of Ed Jenkins, 6—1, 6—2, and Bowden eliminated Bill Cunningham, 6—1, 6—4.

French Star Wins.

The second round in the women's singles was marked by Mme. Sylvia Henrotin's struggle against Minnie Fullen, of Waco, Tex., to stave off elimination. The French star, one of her country's ranking players, dropped the first set to the Southwesterner, who took advantage of her opponent's double faults.

Thereafter, however, Mme. Henrotin steadied down and ran through the next two chapters to win, 7—9, 6—0, 6—2. While Mme. Henrotin found her own service untenable in the first set, she also had difficulty handling Miss Fullen's delivery.

O'Mahony Did Not Quit In Srikat Bout, He Says

New York, March 3 (U.P.).—Danno O'Mahony, Ireland, claimant to the world's heavyweight wrestling title, tonight issued a formal statement in which he said he did not quit in last night's match against Dick Shikat, Philadelphia, at Madison Square Garden.

"The referee must have misunderstood my rich brogue," said O'Mahony.

Whitehill Signed; Stone to Report

By a Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 3.—Earl Whitehill, who represents all of the Nats' experienced southpaw pitching ability, today signed a 1936 contract, reducing Clark Griffith's crop of holdouts to one—Outfielder Johnny Stone.

Whitehill, who had been haggling with Griffith over a salary cut which his new contract contained, is believed to have won the same wage he earned last year—$9,000. A bonus clause inserted into the contract will enable him to cash in also on all victories after he wins his fifteenth game.

Johnny Stone, who for several weeks has rejected an offer of $7,500, is expected to report here tomorrow to discuss terms with Griffith.

Buck Newsom Harris' New Problem

Big Hurler Cuts Loose, Disobeys Orders, and Pilot 'Gives Up.'

Is Not Taking Chance, Slab Ace Says; Myer Attends Drill.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

ORLANDO, Fla, March 3.—Manager Bucky Harris today abandoned supervision of the training of Buck Newsom as a hopeless task and left the big pitcher to his own resources.

Henceforth, Blustering Buck is training on his own responsibility, which Harris agrees may be best, after all.

In the absence of orders and without even informing anybody of his intentions, Newsom, who has been in the Washington camp only three days, wandered out on the pitching mound this morning and began to zoom his shots across the plate as if it were mid-August.

Becomes Panicky.

Harris, hearing the strange thud of whistling pitches in Cliff Bolton's big mitt, turned to see who was the author of these fast ones and became panicky at the sight of Newsom who was using his full wind-up and turning the ball loose with almost all the speed he owns.

Franctically, Harris waved the big pitcher down, and Buck nodded his understanding. For five minutes he slackened his pace but whenever he noticed Harris otherwise occupied, he cut loose with his speed.

"I give up," said Bucky after the workout. "If he wants to train that way, you can't stop him. I know Buck too well. He says his arm is in great shape and that he knows what it can do. Maybe he does. I've seen cases like his before."

Not Taking Chances.

Newsom only laughed. "What's the sense of kidding around," he told reporters. "I'm not taking any chances with my arm. I wouldn't be foggin' 'em in there if I thought it would hurt me. I'm in great shape, I tell 'ya. This trifling around business is for those guys who have been living soft during the winter. I told Bucky he didn't have to worry about me."

There may be some question as to the condition of Newsom's arm, but there is no doubt whatsoever as to the talkative hurler's general physical condition. Right now he can run the tongues off any player in camp and whereas three laps around the track leave the others dog-tired, Big Buck can be seen daily circling the field a dozen times and then chasing fly balls in the outfield.

Must Make Decision.

Some time before April 14, when the firing begins in the pennant race, Bucky Harris must make a decision. Newsom has already announced that he will pitch the opening game in Washington, but that is an honor that traditionally belongs to Earl Whitehill.

The 200 fans in the stands today broke out into repeated applause during the infield practice that was the closing feature of the Nats' workout. Cecil Travis at shortstop, Buddy Lewis at third base and Joe Kuhel at first contributed fancy stuff that evoked rounds of handclaps and Harris and Griffith left the field convinced that their infield worries are over.

Capt. Buddy Myer was in uniform today for the first time, but beyond taking his turn at bat his workout was not strenuous.

Cox Earns Tryout.

Myer surrendered his second-base post to a young fellow named Joe Cox during the infield workout and Cox, who came to the Nats' camp unsolicited, earned himself a tryout with Chattanooga by his sure-handed performance.

Coach Earl McNeely was occupied exclusively today with Outfielder Dee Miles, teaching the promising young redhead how to break on fly balls. Harris looked on with approval, as Miles roamed far to his left, a weakness that was glaring in his play last season.

Art in Photography and Batting Swing

William Klemm, Post Staff.

The Post's staff photographer catches "Esty" Estallella, Washington's Cuban rookie, whose terrific batting power has impressed Manager Bucky Harris and which may win him a berth with the club as pinch-hitter, in a typical pose at Orlando. The enthusiastic Cuban, putting it mildly, has just caught one on the nose.

Cards, Minus Dean, Sail for Cuba

By the Associated Press.

BRADENTON, Fla., March 3.—Minus Dizzy Dean—who once said he didn't want to go anyway, because he'd get seasick—28 St. Louis Cardinals catch an evening boat tomorrow at Miami for Cuba and four exhibition games.

Manager Frank Frisch, after two hard workouts today, called off tomorrow morning's practice session. The team leaves by bus for Miami about noon.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, March 3.—All public schools in San Juan were closed for a half day today to give some 10,000 school children a chance to see the Cincinnati Reds drop an exhibition game to a picked team from the squads of the Cuban Almendares Club and the Brooklyn Eagles. The score was 9 to 2. For some of the youngsters, it was the first view of baseball other than the vacant-lot variety.

Fort Myers, Fla., March 3.—The Athletics split up today into sides, neither of which even closely resembled the A's of just a year ago, and put on the first intra-camp spring training game.

At the end of nine innings, the "Blues," paced by the bats of veteran Outfielder Bob Johnson and Rookie Al Niemiec, second base, had scored 11 runs and shut out the "Reds."

Avalon, Calif, March 3.—The National League Champion Chicago Cubs performed their training duties today with Ford Frick, president of the senior organization, looking on.

Frick not only refused to pick the Cubs to repeat this season, but said he hoped the final day of the season would find one team leading the race by a half game, with the other seven tied for second place.

Sarasota, Fla., March 3.—The young pitchers training here with the Boston Red Sox went through a long defensive drill today under the exacting eyes of such masters as Manager Joe Cronin, Coach Herb Pennock and the two mound aces, "Lefty" Grove and Wes Ferrell.

Lakeland, Fla., March 3.—Joyner (Jo-Jo) White, fleet Detroit Tiger centerfielder, may be forced out of a job with the world champions this year because of the heavy hitting of 23-year-old Rudy York. With Manager Mickey Cochrane anxious to keep York with the team and, perhaps, use him to bolster his outfield batting average, the days of Jo-Jo, "the Tigah Man," who batted .240 last season, may be numbered.

York, up from Beaumont, as a first baseman, is considered the most natural hitter ever to come to the Tiger spring camp. "Pete" Fox is a certainty for right field, with Al Simmons, Goose Goslin, Gerald Walker and York available to give Cochrane a heavy-hitting outfield.

Pasadena, March 3 (AP).—Luke Appling, star Chicago White Sox shortstop, who has been staging a holdout campaign, will report within a week, according to word received by Harry Grabiner, vice president of the club.

Appling, at his home in Atlanta, Ga., notified Grabiner late today he had accepted terms. With Appling lined up, only First Baseman Zeke Bonura and reserve Infielder Jackie Hayes remain to be signed.

Oldfield's Mechanic Sent to Drivers' School

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., March 3 (AP).—Norman E. Messenger, who clung precariously to the running board of "Old 999" back in 1902, wielding an oil can and pliers as Barney Oldfield established a world automobile speed record of 60 miles an hour, suffered his greatest humiliation today. Given his first traffic ticket, he was sentenced to drivers' school.

"I would rather pay a $1,000 fine," he pleaded before Traffic Judge John N. Fegan. "Barney Oldfield taught me to drive 32 years ago, and this is my first ticket."

Pro Nips Par By 6 Shots; Ties Mark

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD, Fla., March 3.—Tony Penna, young Pensacola, Fla., professional, turned in a six-under-par 64 to lead the field at the end of the first 18 holes of the $2,500 Hollywood Open golf tournament today.

Penna, formerly of Congressional Country Club, Washington, D. C., carded 33, 31—64 for the par 36, 34—70 course.

His scintillating round, in which he collected seven birdies, equaled the noncompetitive course record Johnny Farrell set several years ago and pushed him out three strokes in the van of the ace field of money players assembled for the tournament.

One Major Triumph.

The 28-year-old Penna's only major golf victory came in the 1933 Southeastern P. G. A. tourney.

Three strokes back of Penna, at 67, were four high-ranking money players—Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, Va.; Johnny Revolta, of Milwaukee; Lew Waldron, of Chicago, and Denny Shute, of Boston.

At 68 were three others, Clarence Doser, of Rochester, N. Y.; "Lighthorse Harry" Cooper, of Chicago, and Vic Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J., while another three, Bill Mehlhorn, of Louisville; Leo Walper, of Washington, and Tom Kerrigan, of Siwanoy, N. Y., were bracketed at 69.

In the splurge of sub-par shooting, such veterans as Walter Hagen, of Detroit; Frank Walsh, of Chicago, and Willie MacFarlane, of New York City, were content to shoot 70, sound, par golf, confident the 54 holes of the next two days would see the grueling pace abate.

Helen Hicks Cards 80.

Helen Hicks, woman professional golfer from Hewletts, Long Island, apparently was too far back to finish in the money, needing 40 each nine for 80.

In the amateur division, Howard Tryon, of Elmira, N. Y., took first-day honors with 72. He was closely pressed by the golfing Allen brothers of Pittsburgh, Pa.; F. J., in second place with 73, and Donald J., whose 74 took third place.

Tomorrow's second 18-hole qualifying round will determine the 60 low professionals and 10 low amateurs, with ties, permitted to play in the final 36 holes, to be played Thursday. Top prize is $500.

Wiffy Cox, of Washington, remained in the running by virture of a 71 score. He toured the outgoing nine in 35 and was home in 36.

Appleton Begins to Cut Loose, Shows Up Rookies, Wynne Says

(This is the seventh of a series of daily articles telling the experiences of Huck Wynne, Washington sandlot star, at the Nationals' training camp, where he is being given a free trial at the expense of The Washington Post.)

By Huck Wynne.

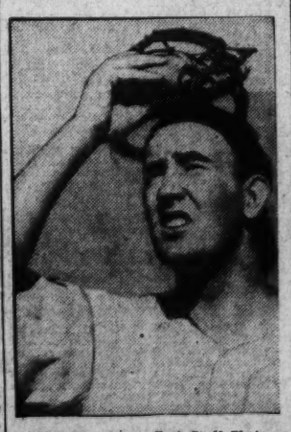
ORLANDO, Fla., March 3.—Until today, a fellow who had been handling the pitches of Pete Appleton down here would never have suspected that he was the leading pitcher of the International League last year.

There were a half dozen rookie pitchers who looked to have more stuff on the ball than old Pete, who for a week was just lobbing 'em over. But I guess it was just his way of getting his arm in shape.

Because, when he cut loose a little today, he really looked like a pitcher who won 22 games with Montreal last season. He didn't throw with any effort at all, but that ball was coming in there and he put it everywhere I asked him to.

He didn't try any curves, of course. There's still orders against bending the ball, but he had a hop on it that was fooling fellows like Powell and Estallella, who have been murdering the rookie pitching.

And you'd never guess, either, if you looked at him right now, that Monte Weaver is the kind of a pitcher he's supposed to be. Monte, like Appleton, has been taking his time down here and he's not ready to cut loose. But it's easy to see that they both know how to pitch.



Post Staff Photos.
In Action.

I saw Buddy Lewis play a few games in Griffith Stadium last Fall and you'd never know he was the same ball player if you saw him down here now. He's laying into the ball up there at the plate and on third base he looks like a better fielder than Travis ever was. Dee Miles, who played with 'em both at Chattanooga, tells me that they liked Lewis down there better than they did Travis.

Patty Berg, Back On Game, Shoots 74 to Win Medal

By the Associated Press.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 3.—Patty Berg's bullet-like drives conquered a treacherous wind today and the Minneapolis girl came through with a near-par 74 for medal honors in the Florida East Coast women's golf tournament.

Playing in competition for the first time since her finals defeat at Ormond Beach last week, the 18-year-old girl wonder of the winter fairways had her game in shape again.

Mrs. Opal S. Hill, of Kansas City, former women's Western champion, was the only other player in the field of 36 starters to approach Patty's score. A 39 out and a 38 in gave her 77.

With a slightly better performance on the greens, Patty would have beaten the women's competitive record of 72 for the St. Augustine links set by Mrs. Crews in 1931.

Averaging better than 200 yards from the tees on the longer holes, the stocky, broad-shouldered high school girl banged her second shots straight and long and her chips were seeking the pin.

Brown Twig, $15.70, Wins First Race of Year at Hialeah Park

High Glee 2d, Defeated by Late Bid

Jockey Joe Renick Rides Mrs. Heighe's Horse to Neck Victory.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., March 3. Coming through on the inside with a late burst of speed, Brown Twig carried the silks of Virginia's Mrs. R. H. Heighe to a stirring triumph in the Kissimmee purse, seven-furlong headline attraction on the card here this afternoon. The battle-scarred Joe Renick, who had ridden the 9-to-1 shot Proph to victory in the juvenile dash, completed a long shot double by virtue of his heady ride on Brown Twig, a $15.7-for-$2 chance in the field of five.

C. V. Whitney's High Glee again failed to stick it out in front, and had to be content with the place position, a length and a half clear of Mrs. C. Crane's Ladfield.

Brown Twig was ridden differently today. He had set the pace and faltered in the late stages of his last appearance.

First Victory of Year.

Under waiting tactics, the son of Brown Bud was able to record his initial success of the year. He covered the distance in 1:23 3-5.

Laughing Sun, a slight favorite over High Glee, appeared very mean. He had to be led to the post, broke slowly and dropped out of the money after reaching a contending position.

High Glee, which, alone with Ladfield, delayed the start six minutes, showed her customary speed from the gate. She outran Ladfield, making that fellow stop. The Whitney mare shortened her stride in the last furlong as Joe Renick sneaked through with Brown Twig to challenge. The Heighe colt got up to win by a neck.

Alert Cameraman Catches Unlucky Speed Demon in Daytona Spill

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Bobby Sall, Patterson, N. J., racing driver, was unpleasantly surprised when his car turned over in the soft sand at Daytona Beach while travelling 80 miles an hour, but he escaped without serious damage. It was something new in morning exercises for the young gentleman, who can be seen flying through the air to the right of his car, sans trapeze. The machine turned over three times.

CORUM, showing his best form, raced on the outside and closed with excellent courage when put to a hard drive. GALLOPING opened up a clear lead when straightened into the backstretch, rallied nicely when shaken up, but tired after crowding PEACE MOVE into the fence midway of the homestretch. Interhigh Grid Schedule Bares Shift in Site; Fight Looms

Only 2 Games Are Booked At Central

Brown, Treasurer, Plans to Take Case Before School Board.

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE 1936 inter-high baseball and football schedules were revealed yesterday, along with the surprising, if not startling, disclosure that the board of principals has decided that the series games in both sports be played around at all five schools instead of solely at one.

A fight against the board's football policy was promised last night. Leonard T. Brown, gray-haired president of the Inter-high Athletic Association, said he would carry the question before the board at its next meeting in an effort to prevent the inter-high grid series from being taken away from Central Stadium.

Only two inter-high football contests will be played at Central, traditional scene of inter-high grid games. The baseball series, hitherto played at Eastern, likewise will be scattered among the various schools. At least, that is the set-up decided upon by the board.

Thought Tentative.

Brown, financial manager of inter-high sports, said he thought the games as arranged are "tentative" according to the schedules given him by the board. However, Principal Allan Davis of Roosevelt, president of the board of principals, said he was not certain but that the schedules are to hold, both as to dates and the places the games are to be played.

In baseball, the home and home system will be entirely new. In football, a move toward taking the series away from Central was made last season. Four of the 10 inter-high games were played away from Central—two at Eastern, one at Western and one at Roosevelt. The trial was a distinct failure in every way.

Encouraging prospects that the football matter may yet be remedied were apparent yesterday. Neither Principal Frank C. Daniel of Tech, nor Dr. Harvey A. Smith of Central, was present at the last meeting of the board of principals. Davis said he "did not pay much attention to where the games were to be played." Birch E. Bayh, head of the physical education department of the District school system and an ex-officio member of the board, was not notified of the meeting.

Declines Comment.

Brown will take his case before the board, probably with the support of Bayh, although the latter declined comment yesterday. John Paul Collins, former assistant principal at Eastern, and last year holder of Brown's position, has declared himself heartily in favor of his successor's stand on the matter.

The purpose of shifting the scene of the football games goes back to the disturbance at the Tech-Western inter-high game in 1934. Believing the crowds could not be handled suitably at Central, the board of principals had four of the ten 1935 games moved.

Montgomery High Five Swamped by St. John's

Montgomery High, of Rockville, offered little opposition to St. John's basketball team yesterday in the Rockville gymnasium, losing, 42 to 17. Coach Horse Holbrook, of the visitors, used his entire squad.

From the opening whistle it was apparent that the Johnnies meant to chalk up their twenty-sixth victory of the season. Bill Counselman amassed 17 points for the victors—a score which equalled the sum total of Montgomery's efforts, despite Gene Ochsenreiter's 10-point contribution.

Joe Freschi Will Wed Boyhood Sweetheart

Joe Freschi, ranking No. 1 bowler of the District and a well-known sandlot baseball player, has scored a strike with Dan Cupid and won the hand of his boyhood sweetheart, The Post learned last night.

Freschi and Miss Audrey Costello, a bowler of note in local circles and Joe's most ardent admirer on the mapleways and the diamond, will be married Saturday evening.

Georgetown Will Open Baseball Drills Today

Freshman Ace in Post Tourney

only Washington player on the star George Washington freshman team which sees action in the Post-A. A. U. tournament tonight against Rockville.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Orlando, Fla., March 3.

A STATE of affairs which has existed ever since Bucky Harris began to visualize the 1936 line-up of his Washington team took him completely by surprise today. Checking up on the batting power of his squad he was pained to discover that there isn't a right-handed hitter among his entire group of regular infielders.

POVICH.

It's a fact. Reading from right to left, or vice versa, you see nothing but southpaw sluggers in the Nats' infield, not excepting the catcher. With Cliff Bolton behind the bat, Joe Kuhel at first base, Capt. Buddy Myer at second, Cecil Travis at short, and Buddy Lewis at third base, the Nats will enter upon the 1936 campaign with a solid line-up of left-handed hitting infielders.

Harris was saying today that his only cure for the situation which finds his club top-heavy with left-handed hitters is to devise a reversible outfield to meet the demands of southpaw pitching. Against left-handed hurling, Harris is devising ways and means to present an outfield comprised exclusively of right-handed sockers.

He has a fair start in that direction with Jesse Hill and Jake Powell, left and centerfield fixtures, able to bring right-handed hitting to bear, but against southpaw pitching there appears no place in the outfield for either Dee Miles or Johnny Stone, the two southpaw-hitting candidates for the job. Thus Carl Reynolds, who, with Roberto Estalella, represents the only other right-handed hitting power among the outfielders, will be called upon whenever the Nats face enemy left-handers.

But Harris is not unduly alarmed by the presence of so many left-handed hitters in his regular line-up. "Fellows like Cecil Travis and Buddy Myer can hit either kind of pitching, and anyway, there are three times as many right-handed pitchers in the league as left-handers. With all those southpaw sluggers we'll have the edge, I think, because we'll face only one left-hander every three or four days."

Despite all the attention being paid to Dee Miles in the camp here, there is a growing conviction that the opening of the season may find the veteran Carl Reynolds in the rightfield post when the Nats take the field on April 13. Reynolds, who would detract nothing from the defensive capabilities of the Washington outfield, is the champion spring hitter of the world.

His case has been among baseball's strangest and is still unaccountable. For the first two months of the last several seasons, the big Texan has pounded the spots off the ball and perennially leads all the league hitters. At one point in early June two years ago he was maintaining the terrific average of .470, with no evidence that his traditional seasonal slump would set in.

But it did, swiftly and completely, and Reynolds finished the season under the .300 mark. But managers have learned to take advantage of his presence in the spring. Bucky Harris was saying today that Carl Reynolds can have the right-field job all spring and all summer, too, if he socks the ball to his satisfaction.

In Short—

Should Cecil Travis blossom as the shortstop he appears to be in training here, it will be a personal triumph for Ed Eynon, secretary-treasurer of the Washington club . . . early last summer when Lyn Lary was proving a disappointment at the job, Eynon advised both Bucky Harris and Clark Griffith that Travis could be converted from a third baseman into the best shortstop in the league . . . Clark Griffith today attempted to show Buck Newsom the trick of getting hit with a pitched ball, thus increasing the big pitcher's usefulness at the plate . . . Griffith demonstrated to Newsom how to turn in toward the plate in order to get tagged on the arm or elbow by an inside pitch, but despite Griffith's assertions that the pitch couldn't hurt him, Newsom refused to learn the art . . . Bucky Harris and Kid Elberfeld were the two greatest in that respect, according to Griffith, who explained that it became such a science with Harris in 1924 that it proved a potent factor in the Nats' pennant victory . . . that was the season when Harris was supposed to have been wearing a special pad across his left side to ease the pain of getting hit.

Rockville Five Faces Frosh In Tourney

GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY'S freshmen team, winner of 20 out of 22 games, will be put to the acid test tonight at Heurich's gym, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest, in a quarter-finals battle with Rockville in the unlimited division of the District A. A. U.-Washington Post basketball championship. They will meet at 9:30.

Two 145-pound games are on the card. The Northeast Boys Club and Shamrock Cleaners are to meet at 7:30 and an hour later the Washington Boys Club will meet Takoma Fire Department.

G. W.'s freshmen certainly respect the strength of Rockville, even though the collegians are favored to win. Rockville has been impressive in its two tournament contests, having walloped National Capital Parks, 44 to 21, and upset the favored Bureau of Investigation Blues, 22 to 21, last Friday.

The Rockville boys won the title of "Iron Men" in the game with the G-Men, using five players—Martland, Lanier, Forney, Hirschberger and Becker—throughout the 40 minutes of play with no substitutions. This Hirschberger has scored 27 points in two games, and will be a marked man against the freshmen.

Conquerors of Mount Vernon, 29 to 16, last week Coach Ott Zahn probably will open the game with the following freshmen: Sampson and Faris, forwards; Borum, center; Collins and Silkowitz, guards. Faris is the shooting ace of the collegians, and Silkowitz, all-New York prep, a mountain of strength on the defense.

Tomorrow night Bureau of Investigation Whites will meet Y. M. C. A. in the feature unlimited game at Heurich.

Government Loop Elects Buckholtz

DISTINCT indications that Washington's sandlot baseball season is just around the corner were obvious last night, for the powerful United States Government League held a rousing meeting at which the loop membership was doubled, increasing the number of teams from four to eight. The league will open its season Saturday, April 25.

Fred Buckholtz, popular hotel proprietor and sports figure, was re-elected president as Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police commissioner, and J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation, took active part in the business of the evening.

The Government League, whose NRA team won the week-day championship of the Washington Post Sandlot Baseball Association, will be minus its champion this year. The unconstitutionality of the recovery act eventually hit the league champs and they have been demobilized.

Many of the players will don the uniform of the Resettlement Administration Club, one of the new teams joining the circuit. The league, one of the topnotch loops in the Post Association last year, was swamped with applications for membership.

Only three clubs will be playing under the same name as they did last season, namely, Metropolitan Police, Treasury and Agriculture. The new clubs already admitted in addition to Resettlement, include Bureau of Investigation and D. C. Commissioners. The Commissioners played under the name of D. C. Repair Shop last season.

Other officers elected in addition to Buckholtz were Inspector Edward J. Kelly, vice president; Clark Griffith, honorary vice president; Joe Leverton, secretary treasurer, and John F. Maragon, press agent. Maj. Brown and Hoover were also elected to the board of directors.

Miller, Sarron May Battle In Capital

By Bill McCormick.

A Staff Correspondent.

MIAMI, Fla., March 3.—The Gulf-warmed atmosphere of Miami today was laden with aftermaths to last night's bit of featherweight championship fisticuffing between Freddy Miller and Pete Sarron as negotiations were opened to bring a return bout for the title to Washington for the annual police benefit card late in April or early in May.

Both Pete Reilly, manager of the fighter who retained his crown against Pete, and Jimmy Erwin, who pulls the strings on Sarron, expressed a desire to have their charges tangle for the championship again in Washington, but made certain that demands must be met before the return bout can become a possibility.

"We must have a competent referee," insisted Erwin, who holds to the belief that Pete was phenagled out of the title when Miller was given a long rest period as he claimed a foul in the twelfth round last night. "I think either George Blake or Lieut. Tom Kennedy, of the Navy, would be able to handle the situation well—and I know they are 'untouchable.'"

Clearly Defined Rule.

"The bout will be possible in Washington only if they have a clearly defined foul rule," maintains Reilly, who insists that Miller was injured by being hit low numerous times during last night's encounter.

Maj. Harvey L. Miller, secretary of the District Boxing Commission, who was angling for the title bout before it was set for Miami, has communicated with both managers regarding the possibility of bringing the two boys back together for the police show, for which Maj. Miller acts as matchmaker, and it is expected that some definite decision will be reached within a few days.

It is understood that if the rematch is made for Washington both Sarron and Miller will work on a flat guarantee, with Miller's title, of course, at stake.

Pros and Cons.

Perhaps no other title fight involving fighters below the heavyweight class ever has evoked such a storm of pros and cons as has followed the affair of last night. When the pros and cons all simmered down they amount to just one thing—Miller was very lucky to retain his championship.

Both fighters wore the type of foul-proof cup required in New York, the type of cup with which it is said to be impossible to injure a boxer with a low blow. During the twelfth round, in which Freddy claimed foul, the champion still was able to stagger to his corner, then fall to his knees briefly and arise for "first-aid," even though fistic authorities always have maintained that a fouled fighter cannot stand erect.

Erwin maintains that Miller was too tired to finish the fight without a rest and resorted to an old ring trick to gain a breathing spell. Reilly and Referee Leo Shea, who refereed, insist that Sarron fouled Miller and that they gave the champion a rest period rather than awarding him the fight on a foul to give the 8,000 cash customers a run for their money.

Former Tech Players Bow to Mount Rainier

The Edgeworth quintet composed of last season's Tech High School stars, found the undefeated Mount Rainier A. C. team a trifle superior and bowed in a thrilling contest, 32 to 27, on the Mount Rainier floor last night. The losers had chalked up a seven-game winning streak. The victory gave the boys from the District line their fifteenth in a row.

Any unlimited team desiring a game tomorrow night is requested to call Bob Bellman, Greenwood 2477.

Colonial Tankmen Oppose LaFayette

George Washington University's natators will churn through the Shoreham pool tonight against LaFayette College in their last dual meet of the local season. The first race is scheduled for 8 o'clock.

The Colonials again will be cast in the role of underdogs, inasmuch as Leopards boast one of the East's strongest combinations. Stoufflet, LaFayette's outstanding swimmer, holds the 1935 Eastern Intercollegiate record for 100 yards and is expected to win easily tonight. He will be opposed by Jack Schmidt and Henry Vonder Bruegge.

New Pin Guide Is Published In Capital

These men, who are familiar with every phase of the duckpin game, have worked hard to revive the publication, first compiled by Len W. Collins in 1931.

After many hours of tedious labor Collins' only reward was the satisfaction in having presented the game with a duckpin masterpiece. Ebersole and McAlwee have taken up the job where Collins had left off, and due to their combined efforts a finished product, which it is hoped will carry national as well as local records for many years to come, has resulted.

The Shamrock girls continued to hold sway in the Washington Ladies League last night at the Recreation alleys, stopping the El Gees, who are pressing them for league supremacy, two games.

The 18-team A. & P. League will hold its third annual singles and doubles sweepstakes tomorrow night at the Silver Spring drives. The events will be rolled on a handicap basis with the total difference between the highest average man, which is M. J. Casey's 112, and the average of the other entries. Three games will be rolled, and total pins will decide the winner.

Yonders Cue Winner.

Leon Yonders, the unmasked marvel, proved the undoing of Frank Kline, a claimant to the championship of Scranton, Pa., in an exhibition pocket billiards match last night. Kline established himself as a genuine threat to marvel Yonders' peace of mind by running up a 32-0 lead in the first inning, but the latter finally prevailed with a high run of 37, and won by the convincing count of 75-45.

Halls of Tech Often Road To Fame

IMAGINE your surprise and consternation if you happened to be swinging briskly around a corner in one of Tech High's long and countless corridors and were suduenly knocked into a state of complete disorder by several youths running around in their underwear.

It would, indeed, be something of a further shock to identify your supposed assailants as nothing more than the Tech track team. Yet, the chances are it would be the Tech track team.

During the winter months, the lengthy catacombs of the big Manual Training School form the best available running track for Coach Hap Hardell's young Cunninghams and Paddocks. You can see them thundering up and down one corridor after another almost any afternoon.

Yesterday, they were going through their paces at a great rate. Only three days remain before Tech travels to Chapel Hill, N. C. to defend its Interscholastic Championship in the Southern Conference track and field meet at the University of North Carolina and Coach Hardell was busy tapering the boys off for the big event.

Eighty Candidates Report.

With 80 candidates turning out regularly, the endless halls of the school come as a godsend to Hardell and his pupils, although the glum mentor sometimes bewails lack of an indoor track. Long lines of aspiring young men trot back and forth through the corridors along about springtime. Coach Hardell realizes dividends when he comes to the Central "C" Club, Penn Relay and other meets, his proteges being several steps further along in training.

Among the corridor runners yesterday were John Williamson and Gus Militzer, who will run the 1,000 meters for Tech at Chapel Hill. The sprinters flitting past the classroom doors included Frank Haske, Bill Sapperstein, Al Thomas, Herb White and Joe Smith, who will run in the 60-yard dash Saturday.

In the gymnasium, Capt. Harry March and bespectacled Leo Wall were taking the hurdles and the mile relay team of Herb Farnsworth, Ludwig Kroutil, Williamson and Militzer later were practicing passing the baton. This quartet has a royal reputation to maintain, what with Tech's great teams of the past two years having taken their diplomas.

Alexandria High Ready For Baseball Workouts

Two Roosevelt Junior Teams Are Victorious

Two Roosevelt High junior varsity basketball teams came through with victories yesterday in games played at the Roosevelt gymnasium. One combination turned back a Tech High Junior five, 15 to 6. The entire Roosevelt squad was used. In the second game, the other Roosevelt novices trounced the Red Raiders, 16 to 14. A total of 23 Roosevelt boys saw action.

Rinaldi Defeats D. & H. Five, 26 to 24

RINALDI TAILORS repulsed a terrorizing Delaware & Hudson team last night at Heurich's gym, 26-24, to reach the semi-finals of the unlimited division of the District A. A. U.-Washington Post basketball championship.

In a game that was packed with action, sensational shooting and passing, the Tailors triumphed on the wings of two free throws by Bill Noonan, their star center.

Spectators were kept in a continuous uproar as the two challengers for the senior District crown fought tooth and nail, goal for goal, through 40 exciting minutes.

It was one of the best basketball games in the history of the championship.

Nine Feld Goals.

Rinaldi took an early lead, and was ahead, 10-3, at one time. Mayfield, D. & H. center, got busy, scored a couple of goals. At the turn, it was 14-12, Rinaldi.

The minutes were ticking away fast. The score was 24-22 when Noonan got his foul goals. Mayfield popped in one for D. & H. With 30 seconds to go D. & H. peppered the backboard, one of Mayfield's tosses barely barely missing field's tosses barely missing the hoops. It would have tied the score.

Ehrlich Poultry ran away with Police Boys Club, 49-15, in a 145-pound game, and Garfield, after being twice tied by Mount Rainier, won in another playoff, 27-15.

Trusts Shift Stocks Carried In Portfolios

Motor, Chemical, Power Stocks Replace Foods and Tobaccos.

New York, March 3.—Reversing their policies of 1934, representative investment companies during 1935 added to their stock holdings in the automobile accessories and chemical groups, also adding utilities, motors, electrical equipment, building and oil stocks to their portfolios. Selling took place chiefly in the tobacco and food groups, both of which were also heavily sold in 1934.

Such are the conclusions of a study made by Distributors Group, Inc., of the portfolios of ten leading management investment companies on December 31, 1935. The study further reveals that while no stocks were unanimously bought by all ten companies, eight companies increased and none sold North American Co.; seven bought and one sold International Harvester; seven bought and two sold America Gas and Electric; five bought and none sold American Telephone, General Electric, and American Smelting.

Seven companies sold and one bought Continental Can; five sold and none bought Liggett & Meyers Tobacco B and Chase National Bank; six sold and two bought Atchison; five sold and one bought Socony Vacuum.

The ten companies whose portfolios are the basis for this study are as follows: Adams Express Co., American General Corporation, American International Corporation, Fourth National Investors Corporation, General American Investors Corporation, General Public Service Coporation, Incoporated Investors, Lehman Corporation, Massachusetts Investors Trust, Tri-Continental Corporation.

Dawson, president of the General Motors Fleet Sales Corporation, Detroit (the General Motors division that handles the sales of passenger cars and trucks to large national commercial fleet users) announces that January sales showed an increase of 145 per cent over the same month of 1935.

This exceeds any previous record of January sales. The year 1935 was the best in the history of the General Motors Fleet Sales Corporation.

Advance in Common Stocks Gathers Momentum on Tax and War Plans; Bonds Firm.

New York, March 3.—Security markets turned strong in the afternoon trading. At the start only fractions were added to stock prices, but the undertone was strong and gradually the bulls ventured into the trading corral. By the last hour they had begun to toss stocks around with less regard to where they might fall than to how high they could be sent. Prices closed 1 to 3 points higher for the leaders in numerous sections, on a turnover of about 2,700,000 shares. May wheat was up a half cent at 100½ cents a bushel.

Among the news items of the day with a distinct bearing on security markets was the reported proposals of the President for radical changes in the income tax laws. At first blush the plan to eliminate corporation income taxes and substitute therefor normal taxes on dividends, along with special provisions for forcing corporations to disburse most of their earnings, instead of piling up large surplus accounts, would seem to be a bull point on stock prices.

Appraising New Plan.

Whether such a plan would in the long run hurt or help business is a question which only much study by experts could answer. Its immediate affects — if the market thinks it likely will be adopted—ought to be to lift prices. Undoubtedly dividend rates would be higher, and reported earnings per share also would increase, with the direct Federal tax on corporation profits eliminated. What the individual would have to pay is another matter. From his standpoint the new proposals might turn out to be worse than the present system.

Many buyers of stocks are not so much interested in actual earnings and dividend rates as they are in the rise of stocks above the prices which they pay. Assuming that a buyer could average only a certain number of dollars per share gain on his year's trading, no matter what the tax system, he would find that he had to pay out more of his income in taxes than formerly, for his dividends would fall under the normal tax brackets.

The man who holds stocks as investments and who does little in and out trading, probably would favor the lifting away of the increased dividends under a broader personal income tax system. In that case the buying of common stocks for investment would increase, prices would go up and, consequently, the trader for turns would have a better chance for trading profits.

What is needed is a much more thoroughgoing chance in the tax system. So long as high income taxes are levied against profits on sales of securities, the higher prices are apt to go, largely because of the reluctance of holders to sell when they think prices are high enough. The stickiness of stock in the hands of those who had large paper profits, caused by the high income taxes, was responsible for much of the fantastic advances in prices before the 1929 break. Something of the sort seems to be again in the making.

Propulsion.

Apart from the stimulus to stocks from the outlook for payment by corporations of some of their surplus, of stock split-ups, of refunding of bonds at lower interest rates, and elimination of preferred stock issues, the markets were not greatly moved. Government bonds were a shade higher. Satisfaction over the success of the latest Treasury loan continued, with full realization of the part of the heavy oversubscription played by banks which asked for more than they expected to get.

Money markets were dull with unchanged prices. Foreign currencies were dampened a little by the start of the armament race in Europe, with Great Britain working over toward the pole. Sterling was down a little and the gold currencies were heavy.

A partial reflection of that was had in the share market. Not only will Europe likely require more American raw materials as the war preparations continue, but the fever will spread to this country. At the end of the trail is actual war, with its awful destruction of property and values of all kinds, but speculative markets think first of the immediate gains on larger manufacturing orders, and next of the repercussion on currencies, i. e., inflation.

Bank Position.

Statistics of the condition of member banks in 101 cities for the week ended February 26 reflected for the most part changes in New York banks made public last week. Demand deposits adjusted were down $23,000,000 in New York and $22,000,000 in the country at large. Decreases in such deposits in San Francisco and in Chicago were largely offset by increases in Boston and in Philadelphia. Holdings of Government securities were $36,000,000 lower. San Francisco, which sold $19,000,000 and Richmond, which disposed of $11,000,000, accounted for the larger portion of the decrease. Holdings of Government guaranteed securities were up $8,000,000 in New York and $4,000,000 for the country as a whole. Other securities were down $35,000,000 in New York and $30,000,000 in the country at large. Government deposits were down $14,000,000 and time deposits were up $11,000,000. Changes in loan figures for the week were small. Member bank reserves were $16,000,000 higher.

Stock Gains.

Although stocks rose in February, bringing the record to 11 months of consecutive gain, the percentage of increase was smaller than for any of the preceding months of advance. Only four of the 24 groups used in The Sun's compilation of stock prices failed to rise. One of the gainers, the utility group, actually did poorly in the market, but the strong advance in Telephone and other communications stocks gave the group a higher value in spite of generally lower prices. The strongest section was the steel and iron group, reflecting the gain in the industry's operating rate in a month when most industries felt a mild setback. Steels rose 15 per cent last month. Rail equipments came next with 9 per cent. Sugars advanced 8 per cent. Rails climbed only 4 per cent. Tobacco products lost ground.

Steel.

Steel common's advance to a new high price continued to give tone to other sections of the market. Next month the Steel Corporation's annual meeting will be held, and stockholders hope that they then will hear an outline of a plan for payment of dividend accumulations on the preferred stock, which will clear the way for common dividends, when once again they are earned. By next month the corporation probably will be covering its full preferred dividend. Whether preferred holders will receive cash or more stock for their arrears is a question the directors are considering. The stock, incidentally, seems to have found a small army of new buyers since Wall Street was flooded with galley proofs of a bearish magazine analysis of the corporation, for the story was quickly seen to have many flaws.

Example.

The Treasury daily statement today was delayed more than four hours. A reprint was ordered "because of numerous errors." That must have caused consternation in the numbers market, but nothing compared to what would have happened had bets been paid on the basis of erroneous figures corrected the following day. The Treasury's example of human fallibility, incidentally, should not be followed by those who are about to fill in their income tax reports.

Realty Bonds Continue Rise Into This Year

Two Months' Gain for 200 Eastern Issues Is 3.6 Per Cent.

New York, March 3.—Real estate bond prices increased 0.8 per cent in February, raising the appreciation to 3.6 per cent for the first two months of 1936, according to statistics compiled by Amott, Baker & Co., Inc., of New York, on the market action of 200 typical Eastern issues.

This increase compared unfavorably with the 2.8 per cent increase in the same real estate bond averages in January, but the average market price per $1,000 face value rose from $400 to $403 on February 29. The average market price was $318 on February 28, 1935.

Bonds covering 120 New York city issues used in compiling the prices fell 0.5 per cent in February, compared with a 3.1 per cent rise in January. The average face value of these issues was $393, compared with $383 on January 1 and $312 on February 28, 1935.

Bonds covering Boston issues gained 6.2 per cent in February, the average price rising to $566 per $1,000 face value. Other increases for February were: Buffalo, 2.2 per cent;cent; Philadelphia, 2.2 per cent, and Pittsburgh, 1.4 per cent.

Hotel issues, the leaders in January with an appreciation of 10.5 per cent, dropped 2.9 per cent in February. Other decreases were theater issues, 6.1 per cent, and housekeeping apartments, 5.5 per cent. Office buildings gained 5.7 per cent and apartment hotels 0.9 per cent.

Francs, Guilders Drop on Tax Plan

New York, March 3 (AP).—Washington tax plans and European sanctions moves were followed by sharply lower rates for gold bloc currencies in the exchange markets yesterday.

The French franc dropped .02 of a cent in New York to 6.66½ cents, Holland guilders yielded .07 of a cent to 68.69 cents and Swiss francs lost .07½ cents to 33.01 cents. The British pound sterling was steadier, declining ⅜ of a cent to $4.99⅛.

Foreign exchange quarters connected the decline with international developments at Geneva, where definite action on sanctions against Italy was taking shape, creating some nervousness that such a step might bring the European situation to a head, and to a substantial movement of other currencies into the dollar as a precautionary measure.

Bank and Insurance Stocks Rally From Low

New York, March 3.—New York City bank stocks rallied in February, after having established a new 1936 low, Hoit, Rose & Troster report. The weighted average of 17 representative issues opened February 1 at the month's high of 58.72, but subsequently declined to the new 1936 low of 55.05 on February 26. The list rallied, however, to close February 29 at 56.59, a 3 per cent gain in three days over the new low.

After reaching new 1936 lows, insurance stocks in the New York City market recovered moderately during February. The weighted average of 20 issues established the new 1936 low of 60.57 on February 26, compared with the month's high of 64.44 on February 1. The close, February 29, was moderately higher at 61.99.

Britain Is Confident Of Recovery Here

New York, March 3.—Confidence that American industry is well launched on a recovery movement has been a major factor in recent European buying of American securities, says the London banking firm of J. Henry Schroder & Co.

"Belief on this side," the London office writes, "in the probable continuance in American recovery seems to be almost as strong as it is in the United States."

Paramount to Merge With 4 Subsidiaries

New York, March 3 (AP).—Officials of Paramount Pictures, Inc., revealed today that directors, at a meeting Friday, had approved a merger of the parent company and four of its subsidiaries.

The subsidiaries merged with the parent organization include Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Paramount International Corporation, Penates Trading Corporation and Parager Corporation.

The position of the Treasury February 29: Receipts, $8,773,590.43. Expenditures, $3,826,727.41. Net balance, $1,766,751,-454.20. Customs receipts for the month, $33,087,484.72.

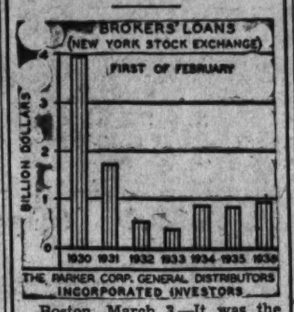
Brokers' Loans Drop To 2% of Stock Value



Boston, March 3.—It was the large debt structure supporting the 1929 stock market which threw it into panic. At that time brokers' loans were 10 per cent of the stock values. This debt element of risk is largely absent from our present market, for brokers' loans, which are less than $1,000,000,000, are only about 2 per cent of the value of all stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

May Wheat Higher; Other Months Off

Chicago, March 3 (AP).—Expected rains Southwest likely to enhance crop prospects led today to active spread trading that sent July and September wheat lower and May wheat up.

$3,459,428 Deficit in 1934; Sales Jump 41 Per Cent.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, March 3.—A net profit of $4,455,735 for 1935 was reported today by the Republic Steel Corporation, compared with a net loss of $3,459,428 in the previous year. The net profit was after deduction for all charges, including depreciation and depletion.

As a part of the 1935 refinancing program in connection with the acquisition of the plants and properties of Corrigan, McKinney and the control of Truscon, the funded debt of Republic was increased from $44,943,200 as of December 31, 1934, to $78,218,248 as of December 31, 1935.

Aluminum Rises 12 Points on Curb

New York, March 3 (AP). — A lively rally in oils, metals and specialties provided the principal feature of trading in the curb market today. Prices took their cue from the big board, where a late buying movement followed the Washington tax news.

Aluminum Co. raced up 12 points to a new high at 141; Bunker Hill & Sullivan was 2 higher at 79⅛; Parker Rust Proof gained 3 at 81, and Pan-American Airways and Newmont Mining did about as well at 65 and 87, respectively.

Other shares improving small fractions to more than a point included Creole Petroleum, Humble, Gulf Oil, Electric Bond & Share, American Gas, Wright Hargreves and Sherwin-Williams.

A few scattered issues failed to share in the upturn. Among these were Lake Shore Mines, off ⅝ at 57 and Sunshine Mining, off ⅛ at 20¾. Transfers of 869,000 shares compared with 561,000 on Monday.

200 Volunteers Chosen To Enforce Road Laws

Columbus, Ohio, March 3 (AP).—Two hundred "T-Men"—volunteers selected to observe and report traffic violators—went to work in Columbus today. They were named by officials seeking to head off a wave of automobile accidents expected to follow dismissal of nearly half the city's policemen.

Some motorists cocked doubting eyes at the emergency plan to augment the reduced police force and declared "it won't work." Others lauded the idea.

Administration 'Bribed' States, Hastings Says

Declaring that the signing of the Magna Charta sounded the death-knell of the divine right of kings and thus established a limited monarchy, Senator Daniel O. Hastings at a luncheon meeting of the Magna Charta Dames yesterday at the Shoreham Hotel, warned against the steady encroachment of the Federal Government into States' rights.

Charging the Administration with "tinkering with the Constitution," Senator Hastings remarked that "the States have been literally bribed into giving their consent." He mentioned as specific illustrations the administration of relief, the social security bill and the agricultural adjustment act.

"These are all State problems," Senator Hastings said, "but the Federal Government sets forth a policy of assistance by contributing Federal funds and because of this contribution insists upon maintaining control."

This policy he averred was "a dangerous entering wedge." He added that it is "a direct violation of our form of Government and no person can forego the ultimate effect it will have upon it."

Referring to that first great document of justice signed in the faraway field of Runnemede, the Senator declared that "it protected all classes of people. "Whenever it became necessary, as it frequently did, in the first century after its passage, to confirm the charter, it was done by a combination of all classes of people against the authority of the King."

More than 150 ladies heard the Senator speak. Present in the audience were Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, of New York (the former Helen Miller Gould), and Mrs. Julien Ortiz, of Wilmington (the former Alice Eugenie du Pont).

Mountain Valley Mineral Water
MEt. 1062. 1405 K St. N.W.

Two exquisite pieces of Chinese art from the Ch'ien Lung period. An urn, carved in the rare blue jade, and an Imperial screen of carved white jade. Formerly in well-known private collections; now at the Clapp & Graham Co., New York City.

Supreme examples of their kind are always cherished. Park & Tilford "Private Stock" is a supreme whiskey because it is all whiskey. Only aged straight whiskies are used—and nothing else. They are masterfully balanced to produce the perfect whiskey.
